

DELHI UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

302, H1-1-2 (Q4) (ARTS)

AL0094601

~~DELHI~~ UNIVERSITY LIBRARY SYSTEM

2- 1/89

Ac No 1.1.1.1

Date of release of loan

This book should be returned on or before the date last stamped below
An overdue charge of 10 np will be charged for each day the book is kept overtime

INDIA AS DESCRIBED IN EARLY TEXTS OF BUDDHISM AND JAINISM

By

BIMALA CHURN LAW, M.A., B.L., Ph.D. (Cal.),
D.Litt. (Lucknow)

Fellow, Royal Asiatic Society of Bengal, Royal Geographical Society of London; Honorary Correspondent,
Archæological Survey of India; Author,
A History of Pali Literature, Geography / of Early Buddhism, Some Kṣatriya Tribes of Ancient India, Ancient Mid-Indian Kṣatriya Tribes, Ancient Indian Tribes,
Mahāvīra, etc., etc.

Thesis approved for the Degree of Doctor of Literature .. in the University of Lucknow

LUZAC & CO.,
GREAT RUSSELL STREET.

Printed by G. E. Bingham, Baptist Mission Press, 41A Lower Circular Road, Calcutta.

PREFACE

The present treatise consists of five chapters dealing with Geography, Kings and Peoples, Social Life and Economic Conditions, Religion, and Education and Learning of Jambudvīpa (India). It is based on the early texts of the Buddhists and Jains, written in Pāli and Ardha-Māgadhī. In my treatment, I have not ignored the evidence of Brahmanical literature, and wherever I have used it, I have done so with a view to clarify the relevant points. I have not failed to make use also of modern literature on the subject including my own publications. The sources utilised have been properly mentioned in the body as well as in the footnotes.

I have endeavoured to draw a picture of India with special reference to her peoples. The scheme adopted by me is in many respects different from that followed by Rhys Davids in his Buddhist India, and the treatment even of common topics is fuller in the sense that I have all along taken into account the collateral evidence of the Jain Āgama. In Chapter I, a ⁴⁶ geography of India has been with the help of a first-hand study of textual evidences bearing upon mountain and river systems and the location and extent of countries, cities, etc. The second chapter has been devoted to the kings and peoples who were the active factors in the make-up of the life and civilisation of ancient India. The third chapter deals with the social life and economic conditions. Here the treatment is novel as showing how all the sections of the people played their part as much in social as in economic life. In the fourth chapter dealing with religion, the treatment may also be claimed as new in the sense that instead of taking religion as the source of inspiration for higher philosophy and ethics, I have sought to show how it was a living factor of ancient Indian civilisation. The last chapter treats of education and learning. Here my endeavour has been specially directed to the classification and description of various institutions and their founders, diverse movements and their promoters, together with the methods adopted and the results achieved. This kind of treatment, as far as my information goes, has not been attempted before.

The present treatise has been accepted as a thesis for the Degree of Doctor of Literature by the University of Lucknow.

BIMALA HURN LAY

CHAPTER I

GEOGRAPHY

he country which is now known to us as India was known, to all intents and purposes, to the Buddhists as Jambudvīpa and to the Jains and the Brahmins as Bhāratavarṣa (Bharahavāsa). In the Purāṇas, Jambudvīpa is counted as one of the seven dvīpas or mythical continents into which the Earth, as then known or imagined, was divided. Bhāratavarṣa was just one of the nine varṣas or countries constituting the nine main divisions of Jambudvīpa. So far as the varṣa divisions of Jambudvīpa are concerned, the Jaina description of Jambudvīpa in the Jambudīva-paññatti and other works based upon it, is materially the same as found in the Purāṇas.¹ Thus with the Jainas and Brahmin writers Jambudvīpa as a continent was thought of as of much wider extension than Jambudvīpa as known to the Buddhists. In all earlier and later Buddhist texts and commentaries Jambudvīpa figures as one of the four mahā-dvīpas or great continents with Mt. Sineru (Sumeru) in the centre of them. The

¹ Matsya Purāṇa, 114, 85. The Jambudīva-paññatti speaks of 92 varṣas.

Pubbavideha or Eastern continent is placed to the east of Sineru, the Aparagodāna or Aparagoyāna the Western continent to the west, the Uttarakuru or Northern continent to the north, and the Jambudvīpa or Southern continent to the south.

Even we are told that the land in Jambudvīpa where the people coming originally from Pubbavideha settled down, was named Videha after them; the land where the people coming from Aparagodāna settled down, became known by the name of Aparānta; and the land in which people from Uttarakuru settled down, became known under the name of Kuru.¹

The Buddhist Sineru, also called Meru, Sumēru, Hemameru and Mahāmeru, is the highest conceivable mountain which formed the centre of the earth. In the sea, it is based to a depth of eighty-four thousand yojanas, and above the sea level, it rises to the same height. The Yugandhara, the Īsadhara, the Karavika, the Sudassana, the Nemindhara, the Vinataka and Assakappa are the seven mountain ranges that surround it. On its summit is Tāvātimsa, the Heaven of the Thirty-three gods, and at its foot is Asurabhavana, the domain of the demons. On its four sides are the four great continents each containing several smaller ones.¹ The Buddhists as well as others in India treat Sineru as an emblem of long duration. Both its conception and description are semi-astronomical, semi-terrestrial, and, on the whole, mythical in their origin and character.

We get a slight realistic touch in the Purāṇas that locate the Sumeru mountain with its altitude of one hundred thousand yojanas at a central region of Ilāvṛtavarṣa, the country, which, according to them, stands in the middle of the nine² varṣas of Jambudvīpa. To the south of Ilāvṛtavarṣa is the Niṣadha mountain range, and to the south of it is Harivarṣa, the country which lies just to the north of Bhāratavarṣa. In between the two is the Himalaya mountain with the Hemakūṭapārvata north of it. The Himalayan range extends east and west over a distance of about 1,600 yojanas. The topography of this range as it stands in relation to Bhāratavarṣa may be picturesquely represented by the shape of a bow with its string to the south (Himavān uttareṇāsya kārṇukasya yathā guṇaḥ).³ The Jambudīva-paripatti, which, like the Purāṇas, locates Harivarṣa to the north of Bhāratavarṣa and the Himalaya mountain, divides the Himalayan range into two, the Mahāhimavanta or Greater Himalayan and the Cullahimavanta or Lesser Himalayan. The former extends eastwards up to the eastern sea, i.e., the Bay of Bengal, and the latter westwards and then southwards up to the sea below the Varṣadhara mountain, i.e., the Arabian sea.¹

¹ Aṅguttara, iv, p. 1001.; Samantapāsādikā, i, p. 119; Vissuddhimagga, p. 206; Parasutthajotikā, II, pp. 113, 485; Dvayāvalāna, p. 217.

² Seven, according to Jambudīva-paripatti.

³ Bhāgavata Purāṇa, Dvīpavarṣa-varṇanā-kāṇḍa, Ch. vi.

The topographical outline of India to the south of the Himalayas is sought to be pictured in the Pali Mahāgovinda-suttanta in the shape of a bullock-cart with its face towards the south. Accordingly it is described as extended on the north.² The symbol suggested in the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa for visualisation of the surface of India is one of the convex shape of the upper shell of a tortoise (kūrmaprṣṭha).³ It is obviously a very correct picture of the thing, inasmuch as all the rivers of India either flow eastwards into the Bay of Bengal or flow westwards into the Arabian sea. Further, according to the Jambudīva-paññatti, the Vaitāḍhya (Vindhya ?) mountain range divides

¹ Jambudīva-paññatti, i, 9: Bharaṇe nāmaṃ vāse... Cullahimavantaṃ vāsaḥarapavvayassa dāhiṇenaṃ dāhiṇalavaṇa-samuddassa uttareṇaṃ, puratthimalavaṇasamuddassa paccatthimeṇaṃ... The same extension of the range is implied in the Māhinda, p. 114.

² Dīgha, II, p. 235: uttareṇa āyatam, dakkhiṇena sakāṭa-mukhaṃ.

³ Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, Chaps. 57 and 58.

India into two halves, the northern half (uttarārdha), later called Āryāvarta, and the southern half (dakṣiṇārdha), later called Dākṣiṇātya or Deccan.¹

The Himalaya mountain is known in Pali by such names as Himavā, Himācala, and Hima-vanta. It is one of the seven mountain ranges that surround Gandhamādana.² According to traditional description, it extends over a distance of three hundred thousand yojanas (leagues),³ and contains eighty-four thousand peaks (kūṭas), the highest of them being five hundred leagues.⁴ Here the length, the number and the altitude given are all evidently fabulous. We have mention of seven great Himalayan lakes: Anotatta, Kaṇṇamuṇḍa, Rathakāra, Chaddanta, Kuṇāla, Mandākinī and Sihappapātaka, that are never heated by the sun.⁴ Each of them is fifty leagues in length, breadth and depth.⁵ Their names are such as to defy all attempts at a correct identification, and the description of their length, breadth and depth is too symmetrical to inspire confidence. The Kuṇāla

¹ Jambudīva-pariṇatti, i, 12: Bharahe vāse Veyaddhe ṇāmaṃ pavvaye paṇṇatte: uttaraddha-Bharahavāsassa dāhiṇeṇaṃ dāhiṇa-bharahavāsassa uttareṇaṃ.

² Paramatthajotikā, II, p. 66; Malalasekera, Dict. of Pali Proper Names, ii, p. 1325.

³ Paramatthajotikā, II, p. 224.

^{4, 5} Aṅguttara, iv, p. 101; Manorathapūraṇī, ii, p. 103; Paramatthajotikā, II, p. 443.

Jātaka mentions by name Manipabbata, Hīṅgulapabbata, Añjanapabbata, Sānupabbata, and Phalīkapabbata among the Himalayan peaks,¹ none of which can now be satisfactorily identified. The Sutta-nipāta commentary speaks of some five hundred rivers,² only ten of which were to be reckoned, according to the Milinda,³ the rest having an intermittent periodical flow. Of the ten rivers,⁴ the first five, Gaṅgā, Yamunā, Aciravatī, Sarabhū and Mahī that were honoured as the five great rivers (pañca mahānadiyo)⁵ constituted the Ganges group, and the rest, Sindhu, Sarassatī, Votlavatī, Vitamsā and Candabhāgā, with the exception of the second, constituted the Sindhu group. Broadly speaking, the first five flowed from the Jaina Mahāhimavanta, and the other five from the Lesser range.

The Kuṇḍala Jātaka draws our attention to two most delightful spots in the shape of rocky table-lands (silātala), one, called Suvannātala, on the east side of Himavanta, and the other, called Hīṅgulātala, on the west side, the latter being sixty leagues in extent.⁶ Similarly the

¹ Jātaka, v, p. 415.

² Paramatthajotikā, II, p. 437.

³ Milinda, p. 114.

⁴ Cf. Mārkandeya Purāṇa, 57, 16-18

⁵ Aṅguttara, iv, p. 101; Vin., ii, p. 237; Samyutta, ii, p. 135; v, p. 401.

⁶ Jātaka, v, p. 415.

Milinda-pañha mentions one Rakkhitatāla or protected table-land in the Himalayan region.¹

The Buddhists derive the name of the continent of Jambudvīpa from a Jambu tree, which stands as its kalpavṛkṣa, with its trunk fifteen yojanas in girth, outspreading branches fifty yojanas in length, shade one hundred yojanas in extent and height of one hundred yojanas,²—all too symmetrical and imaginary to be believed as correct. It is on account of this tree that the continent is also called Jambuvana³ and Jambusandā.⁴ The tree stands on a bank of the river Jambo (Jambu). The continent extends over a distance of ten thousand leagues, of which four thousand are covered by the seas, three thousand by the Himalayas, and three thousand only are inhabited by men.⁵ It contained as many as 34,000 towns, large or small.⁶ As Malalasekera points out, 'this number is sometimes reduced to sixty thousand, forty thousand, or even twenty thousand, but never too less'.⁷ A description in the Anguttara-nikāya would have us believe that trifling in number were the parks, groves,

¹ Milinda, p. 6.

² Vinaya, i, p. 30; Samantapāsādikā, i, p. 119; Paramatthajotikā, II, p. 443; Visuddhimagga, i, p. 205.

³ Law, Geography, p. xvi.

⁴ Sutta-nipāta, verse 552; Paramatthajotikā, II, p. 121.

⁵ Paramatthajotikā, II, p. 437.

⁶ Ibid., II, p. 59. Cf. Jātaka, iv, p. 84.

⁷ Malalasekera, op. cit., i, p. 941.

lakes, etc., in Jambudvīpa, while more numerous were the steep, precipitous places, unfordable rivers, inaccessible mountains, and the rest.¹

In accordance with the description in the Jambudīva-paññatti, the Bhāratavarṣa which is situated to the south of the Himalayas and between the eastern and western seas, abounds in prickly stumps and thorns, uneven and inaccessible roads, hills and dales, fountains and springs, khattās, crevices, rivers and lakes, trees, creepers and shrubs, forests and grasses, thieves, ḍimbas and ḍamaras, famines and bad times, religious sects, the poor and destitute, emergencies and epidemics, wicked persons, drought, diseases, iniquities and constant commotions. It appears from the north like a bedstead, and from the south, like a bow (uttarāo paliaṃka-saṃthāṇa-saṃthie, dāhiṇāo dhaṇupitṭha-saṃthie). By the two large rivers, Gaṅgā and Sindhu, and the Vaitāḍhya mountain range it is divided into six portions (chabbhāga-pavibhatte). It is 526 $\frac{8}{16}$ leagues in extent.²

As for the number and location of the dvīpas, the Pali account may be shown to have followed the same tradition as that in the Mahābhārata which, too, speaks of just four great continents and locates them on four sides of the golden mountain of Meru or Sumeru. The continent on the west side is, however, called Ketumāla instead of Aparagodāna, and that on the east side, Bhadrāsva instead of Pubbavideha. The continent on the north side is called Uttarakuru, precisely as in Pali.¹ To the north of Harivarṣa and in between the two mountain ranges of Nīla (on the north) and Niṣadha (on the south) lie two other ranges, the eastern, called Mālyavat, and the western, called Gandhamādana. Encircling the space between them stands the Meru mountain.² As in Pali texts, the Jambudīva-panṇatti and the Purāṇas, so in the Great Epic the name of Jambudvīpa is derived from a mighty Jambu tree, called Sudarśana, which, too, is located in a spot between the two ranges of Nīla and Niṣadha.³ The origin of the Jambu river is accounted for, exactly as in Pali texts, by an accumulated flow of the juice of rose-apples that grow on that Jambu tree.⁴

¹ Anguttara, i, p. 35; Malalasekera, op. cit., i, p. 941.

² Jambudīva-paññatti, i, 9.

The Mahābhārata agrees with the Jambudīva-panṇatti and the Purāṇas when it speaks of six varṣaparvatas in Jambudvīpa. These are: Himavān, Hemakūṭa, Niṣadha, Nīla, Śveta and Śṛṅgavān, enumerated from south to north, each forming a long range from sea to sea or ocean to ocean.⁵ Bhārata-varṣa is, of course, placed to

¹ Mahābhārata, Bhīṣmaparva, 6.12, 13; 7.13; 6.31; 7.13, 14.

² Ibid., 6.9, 10.

³ Ibid., 7.19, 20.

⁴ Ibid., 7.22-26.

⁵ Ibid., 6.3-8.

the south of the first. It also speaks of seven divyagaṅgās or celestial rivers: Nalinī, Pāvani, Sarasvatī, Jambu, Sītā, Gaṅgā and Sindhu.¹ The origin of Gaṅgā is traced to a lake called Bindusara, which is situated in the middle of three peaks, Kailāsa, Maināka and Hiranyaśṛṅga.² The Jambudīva-paṇṇatti connects the origin of Gaṅgā with a flow through the eastern outlet of a great lake in the Lesser Himalayan range, called Mahāpadmahrada, and that of Sindhu with a flow through its western outlet. It speaks of a similar lake in the Greater Himalayan range. The description of the lake with four torāṇas or outlets is akin to the Buddhist account of the lake Anotatta, to which it refers the origin of the five great rivers flowing eastwards. Anotatta, too, is like the Jaina Padmahrada, a lotus lake with four mukhas (outlets) on its four sides, from each of which flows a river. Beginning from the east, the outlets are called Sīhamukha (the Lion face), Hatthimukha (the Elephant face), Assamukha (the Horse face), and Usabhamukha (the Bull face).³ The four rivers that flow, according to the Jambudīva-paṇṇatti, from the four outlets of the Lotus lake are, Gaṅgā, Rohitā, Sindhu and Harikāntā.

¹ Mahābhārata, Bhīṣmaparva, 6.49, 50.

² Ibid., 6.43, 44.

³ Paṇḍarāśāṣṭī, ii, p. 586. ⁴ Jambudīva-paṇṇatti, iv, 34, 35.

The long description in the Pali commentaries¹ of the origin of five rivers, Gaṅgā, Yamunā, Aciravatī, Sarabhū and Mahī from the Anotatta lake may be best summed up in the words of Dr. Malalasekera: the river which flows out through the south channel 'circles the lake three times under the name of Āvaṭṭagaṅgā, then as Kaṇhagaṅgā flows straight for sixty leagues along the surface of a rock, comes into violent contact with a vertical rock, and is thrown upwards as a column of water three gāvulas in circumference; this column, known as Ākāsaḡaṅgā, flows through the air for sixty leagues, falls on to the rock Tiyaḡgala, excavating it to a depth of fifty leagues, thus forming a lake which is called Tiyaḡgalapokkharāṇī; then the river, under the name of Baḡalagaṅgā, flows through a chasm in the rock for sixty leagues, then under the name of Ummaggaḡaṅgā,² through a tunnel for a further sixty leagues, and finally coming upon the oblique rock Vijjha, divides into five streams forming the five rivers'.³

¹ Papañcasūdanā, Sinhalese ed., II, p. 586; Manorathapūraṇī, II, pp. 759-60; Paramatthajotikā, II, pp. 437-9.

² The Ājīvikas cherished a tradition of seven Gaṅgā which they knew as Gaṅgā, Mahāgaṅgā (perhaps, Gaṅgā proper), Svādhīnagaṅgā, Mṛdugaṅgā, Lohitaḡaṅgā (evidently Lauhitya or Brahmaputra), Avantigaṅgā (evidently Avanti), and Paramāvantigaṅgā. Of Rockhill, Life of the Buddha, p. 253.

³ Malalasekera, op. cit., I, pp. 783-84.

A similar account of the origin and course of Gaṅgā and Sindhu is presented in the Jambudīva-panṇatti. But what is really important in it is the suggestion that thousands of other rivers fall into the Ganges through which they enter the eastern sea,¹ not directly. The same as to the Indus.

The identification of the Pali Anotatta lake with the Bindusara in the Mahābhārata and the Mānas-sarovara of popular fame may be justified by the fact that, like the latter, the former is associated with Kelāsa or Kailāsa. In Pali commentaries it is said to be enclosed by five Himalayan peaks, known as Sudassanakūṭa, Cītrakūṭa, Kālakūṭa, Gandhamādana and Kelāsa.²

In the Jambudīva-panṇatti we have mention of eight peaks (kūṭas) of the Greater Himalayan range, of eleven of the Lesser range, and of nine of the Vaitāḍhya range which divides India into two halves: Āryāvarta and Dākṣiṇātya. The eight Mahāhimavanta kūṭas are Siddhāyatana, Mahāhimavadadhiṣṭhātr, Haimavatapati, Rohitanadisurī, Hṛisurī, Harikāṇṭānadisurī, Harivarṣapati and Vaidūrya.³ The eleven connected with the Lesser range comprise Siddhāyatana, Kṣudrahimavadgiri, Kumāradeva, etc.¹ The list of nine peaks associated with the Vaitāḍhya range begins with Siddhāyatana and ends in Tamisrāguhā.² The names are too ingeniously Jaina to be considered genuine and identifiable.

¹ Jambudīva-panṇatti, iv, 34: puratthābhimuhi āvattāsamāpi coddasahira salīlasahasseehi samaggā ahe jagāma dālatitā puratthim-eṇaṃ lavaṇasaṃuddaṃ samappei.

² Paṇṇasādanī, ii, p. 585; Manorathapūraṇī, ii, p. 759.

³ Jambudīva-panṇatti, iv, 80.

True that in it, precisely as in the Mahābhārata, and the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, Bhāratavarṣa is described as a peninsula with seas on its three sides, east, south and west.³ But is it not somewhat far-fetched to represent the topographical outline of the Deccan figuratively by the shape of a half-moon (addhacaṇḍasaṁsthāna-saṁsthie)? To the Buddhists, as we saw, Jambudvīpa is shaped like a bullock-cart with its face towards the south. In the Great Epic the shape is poetically conceived as one resembling, from south and north, a bended bow of which the string being pulled by the hand forms an apex at Dhanuṣkoṭi, Rāmasetu or Rāmesvaram.⁴ In the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa the shape of India, according to one description, is like that of a tortoise (kūrma) which lies outspread, with its face towards the east,⁵ and,

¹ Jambudīpa-parṇatti, iv, 35.

² Ibid., i, 12.

³ Ibid., i, 10.

⁴ Mahābhārata, Bhīṣmaparva, 6.38.

⁵ Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, Chaps. 57-58.

according to another, like that of a peninsula with the Himalayan range stretching along on its north, like the string of a bow.¹ According to Hiuen Tsang, the north part is broad, the southern part narrow. As in the Jambudīva-panṇatti, he describes its shape as one like that of a half-moon.² All these images are suggestive, though only approximately accurate.

In agreement with the Great Epic³ and the Purāṇas, the Jambudīva-panṇatti derives the name of Bhāratavarṣa from king Bharata whose sovereignty was established over it. It speaks of six divisions (bhedā, khaṇḍā) in Northern India, and of three divisions in Southern, Eastern, Western and Middle. These are all internal divisions of India proper. The nine bhedas or parts of Varāhamihira conforming, as they do, to the centre and eight of the ten points of the compass: eastern, southern, western, northern, south-eastern, south-western, north-western and north-eastern (also suggested by the Jainas), are all internal. The nine bhedas or khaṇḍas mentioned in the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa and the Siddhāntasiromaṇi (iii, 41), and somewhat differently enumerated in the Vāmana and Garuḍa Purāṇas so as to count Kāśāha and

¹ Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, Chap. 57: Dakṣiṇe pārate hyasya pūrveṇa cha mahodadhīḥ Himavān uttarenāsya karmūkasya yathā guṇaḥ.

² Beal, Buddhist Records of the Western World, i, p. 70.

³ Mahābhārata, Bhīṣmaparva, iii, 41.

Simhala dvīpas among them, were all internal even as they were explained to Alberuni and Abul Fazl. But reading between the lines, one may find that the Mārkaṇḍeya description hardly leaves room for doubt that only the ninth of nine dvīpas constituting the Bhāratavarṣa, elsewhere called Kumāra, Kumārī or Kumārika, was the India proper.¹ The Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa gives it a length of one thousand yojanas from south to north.

Like Bhāratavarṣa in the Jambudīva-parṇatti,² Jambudvīpa in Pali texts is described as the kingdom of a king overlord (cakkavattī).³ Accordingly Jambudvīpa finds mention in Pali as the continent over the whole of which the sovereignty (ekarajjābhisekaṃ) of Dhammāsoka prevailed.⁴ In Aśoka's own description Jambudvīpa, which was somewhat wider than his own kingdom (vijita), was certainly the whole of India where he succeeded in creating a sphere of righteousness. He gives it a length of six hundred leagues.⁵

As for countries and peoples (janapadā), the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa introduces them, adopting

¹ Law, Geographical Essays, p. 120f.

² Jambudīva-parṇatti, iii, 41: Bharāhe vā'e . . . Bharāhe nāmaṃ rāyā cāuraṃta cakkavattī samuppajjitthā.

³ Aṅguttara, iv, p. 90: Cakkavattī ahuṃ rājā Jambusaṇḍassa issaro.

⁴ Samantapāsādikā, i, p. 41.

⁵ M.R.E. and R.E. XIII.

the following system of classification: (1) those belonging to Madhyadeśa (Middle country); (2) those to Udīcya (Northern region); (3) those to Prācya (Eastern India); (4) those to Dakṣiṇāpatha or Dākṣiṇātya (Deccan); (5) those to Aparānta (Western India); (6) those to the Vindhya region (Vindhya or Vindhyapṛṣṭha); and (7) those which are mountainous (parvatāśrayī).¹ These may be shown to have been a result of further systematisation from the Mahābhārata, Bhīṣmaparva, Ch. 9, in which the divisions Prācya, Udīcya, Dakṣiṇa, Aparānta and Pārvatīya are distinctly mentioned, and the remaining two are implied. The five traditional divisions of India, as met with in Hiuen Tsang's Si-yu-ki and the Bhuvanakośa of the Purāṇas are: as enumerated in the former—northern, southern, eastern, western and central²; and as in the latter—Madhyadeśa (Middle country), Udīcya (Northern), Prācya (Eastern), Dakṣiṇāpatha (Deccan) and Aparānta (Western).³ Rājasekhara, in his Kāvya-mīmāṃsā, offers the following description of them:

‘Tatra Bārāṇasyā parataḥ Pūrṇadeśaḥ
Māhīṣmatyā parataḥ Dakṣiṇāpathaḥ
Devasabhāyā parataḥ Pāścāddesaḥ
Pṛthudakāt parataḥ Uttarāpathaḥ

¹ Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, Chap. 57.

² Beal, Records, i, p. 70; Cunningham, Ancient Geography, p. 136.

³ See Geography of Ancient India —

Vinaśanaprayāgayoh Gaṅgā-Yamunayośca
antaram Antaravedī.’¹

‘To the east of Benares is the Eastern India. To the south of Māhiṣmatī is the Deccan. To the west of Devasabhā is the Western India. To the north (better, north-west) is the Northern (better, North-western) India. And the tract lying between Vinaśana and Prayāga and between the Ganges and the Jumna is the Inland (same as Midland or Middle country of other texts).’

Cunningham elucidates the geographical significance of Hiuen Tsang’s ‘Five Indies’ in the following manner:

(1) Northern India comprises the Punjab proper including Kashmir and the adjoining hill States with the whole of eastern Afghanistan beyond the Indus and the present Cis-Sutlej States to the west of the Saraswatī river;

(2) Western India, Sind and Western Rajputana with Cutch and Gujrat and a portion of the adjoining coast on the lower course of Narmadā river;

(3) Central India, the whole of the Gangetic provinces from Thaneswar to the head of the Delta and from the Himalayan mountains to the banks of the Narmadā;

(4) Eastern India, Assam and Bengal proper including the whole of the Gangetic Delta together with Sambalpur, Orissa and Ganjam; and

(5) Southern India, the whole of the peninsula from Nasik on the west and Ganjam on the east to Cape Comorin on the south including the modern districts of Berar and Telingana, Mahārāṣṭra and the Konkan with the separate States of Hyderabad, Mysore and Travancore or very nearly the whole of the peninsula to the south of the Narmadā and the Mahānadī rivers.

The broad divisions of India, met with in early Pali texts, are rather six than five. These are: (1) Majjhimadesa (i.e. Madhyadesa or Middle Country);¹ (2) Hemavata or Himavanta (Himalayan region);² (3) Uttarāpatha (North-western region);³ (4) Dakkhināpatha or Dakkhinā janapadā (i.e. Dākṣiṇātya or Deccan);⁴ (5) Pubbanta (Eastern India); and (6) Aparānta (Western India).

The Anguttara Nikāya mentions the following sixteen as Mahājanapadas among the countries

¹ Vinaya, i, p. 197; Jātaka, i, pp. 49-80.

² Mahāvamsa, xii, 41; generally called Himavantapadesa in several Jātakas.

³ Vinaya, iii, p. 6; Samantapāsādikā, i, p. 175; Jātaka, ii, p. 277, iv, 79; Divyāvadāna, p. 470; Mahāvastu, iii, p. 303; Petavatthu-aṭṭhakathā, p. 200; Theragāthā-aṭṭhakathā, i, p. 339.

⁴ Sutta-nipāta, verse 976; Vinaya, i, pp. 195-6; ii, p. 298; Jātaka, iii, p. 463; v, p. 133; Sumaṅgalavilāsinī, i, p. 265.

in Jambudvīpa: Kāśī, Kosala, Aṅga, Magadha, Vajjī, Malla, Ceti, Vamśa, Kuru, Pañcāla, Maccha, Sūrasena, Assaka, Avantī, Gandhāra and Kamboja,¹ each named after the people who settled down there or colonised it. As noted by Dr. Malalasekera,² the first fourteen are included in the Majjhimadesa,³ and the last two in Uttarāpatha. The Dīgha Nikāya gives a list of twelve only, omitting the last four, while the Cullaniddesa adds Kalinga to the list and substitutes Yona for the Gandhāra. The Jaina Bhagavatī Sūtra (otherwise called Vyākhyā-prajñapti) gives a somewhat different list of sixteen containing Aṅga, Baṅga (Vaṅga), Magadha, Malaya, Mālava, Accha, Vaccha (Pali Vamśa), Koccha, Pādha (?), Lādha (Rādha), Bajjī (Pali Vajjī), Moli (Malla ?), Kāśī, Kosala, Avaha (?), and Sambhuttara (?).

A short description of each of the six divisions, as made out from Pali, taking along with it the principal kingdoms, cities, towns, rivers, peoples, etc., is found indispensable in the present chapter. To begin with—

I Middle country (Madhyadeśa): Madhyadeśa has been described in the Dharmasūtra

¹ Anguttara, i, p. 213; iv, pp. 252, 256, 260.

² Malalasekera, op. cit., ii, p. 494.

³ According to Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa (Chaps. 57, 32–35), the countries in Madhyadeśa were Matsya, Kuśula, Kulya, Kuntala, Kāśī, Kosala, Arvuda, Pulinda, Samaka, Vṛka and Gvaṇḍhanapura. It refers Avantī to Aparānta.

of Baudhāyana as lying to the east of the region where the river Saraswatī disappears, to the west of the Black forest (Kālākavana),¹ to the north of the Pāripātra mountain and to the south of the Himalayas.² The eastern boundary excluded not only the country now known as Bengal but Behar which in ancient days included the whole of Magadhan country, the Buddhist land par excellence. According to Manu, Madhyadeśa extends from the Himalayas in the north to the Vindhya in the south and from Vinasāna (the place where the river Saraswatī disappears) in the west to Prayāg in the east.³ It is otherwise known as Antaravedī or Inland which extends up to Benares in the east.⁴ The Buddhist writer would extend the boundary of Madhyadeśa farther towards the east so as to include Āṅga and Magadha. According to the *Mahāvagga*⁵ of the Vinaya Piṭaka, it extends in the east to the town of Kajaṅgala⁶ beyond which was the city

¹ Cunningham, Ancient Geography of India, li and xli, f.n. 1.

² Baudhāyana, 1, 1, 2, 9, etc.

³ Manu, II, 21 'Himavad-vindhyaḥ madhye yat prāḡ vinasānādaḥ pratyageva Prayāgā ca Madhyadeśah prakṛtītatāh'

⁴ Kāvya-mīmāṃsā, p. 93 The same extension is implied also in the Mārkandeya Purāṇa.

⁵ Vol. V, pp. 12-13.

⁶ Identical with Ka chu-wen-kilo of Yuan Chwang which lay at a distance of above 400 li east from Campā (Bhagalpur). Cf. Sumangalavāṇīśā, II, 429, as to Kajaṅgala forming the eastern boundary of the Madhyadeśa. Also see Jāt, III, 226-7; IV, 310.

of Mahāsāla; in the south-east, to the river Salājavatī (Sarāvati); in the south, to the town of Setakaṇṇika; in the west, to the Brahman district of Thūṇa;¹ and in the north, to the Uśiradhvaja mountain.² The Divyāvadāna (pp. 21-22) extends its eastern boundary still farther so as to include Puṇḍavardhana which in ancient times included Varendra (roughly identical with North Bengal). It is 300 yojanas in length, 250 yojanas in breadth and 900 yojanas in circuit.³

Thus it may be shown that the definition of the Middle country was not the same at all times and with all the authorities. In Manu, ii, 19, Kurukṣetra, Matsya, Pañcāla and Śūrasena are included in Brahmarṣideśa, while the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa includes them in Madhyadeśa. Manu's Middle country is a tract between Vinasana and Prayāga, while in the above Purāṇa and the Kāvya-mīmāṃsā it extends so far east as to include Kāśī and Kośala. The Pali list of six principal cities in the Mahāparinibbāna Suttanta (Dīgha, ii, p. 146): Campā, Rājagaha, Śāvatthī, Sāketa, Kosambī and Bārāṇasī, suggests an extension which included

¹ Consult Cunningham, Ancient Geography of India. Introd. xliii, fn. 2, as to the identification of Thūṇa with Sthānesvara: also see Jāt., vi, 62.

² It may be said to be identical with Uśiragiri, a mountain to the north of Kañkhal, I.A., 1905, 179.

³ JRAS., 1904, p. 86.

Kāśī, Kośala and Vatsa in the west but excluded Avantī and Śūrasena. These two countries have been expressly excluded in the Vinaya Piṭaka from the Middle country. Dr. Malalasekera has not cited any Pali authority justifying their inclusion in the Majjhimadesa.

The seven representative rivers of this division are enumerated in one list as Bāhukā (Bahukā),¹ Adhikakkā, Gayā, Sundarikā, Sarassatī, Payāgā and Bāhumatī, and in another list as Gaṅgā, Yamunā, Sarabhū, Sarassatī, Aciravatī, Mahī and Mahānadi.² The Jātaka mentions the Doṇa and Timbaru along with the Bāhukā and Gayā.³ Here Bāhukā is evidently the same river as Vāhudā in the Mahābhārata,⁴ which the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa connects with the Himalayas along with Gaṅgā and Yamunā.⁵ The Adhikakkā remains yet to be identified. The Gayā is no other than the Phalgu forming just a united flow of the Nerañjarā (Nairañjanā) of Buddhist fame and the Mahānadi (Mohānā of Brahmanical fame).⁶ The Sundarikā was a sacred river in Kośala.⁶ The Sarassatī is identified with the famous Saraśvatī which taking its rise in the Himalayas, disappears at

¹ Jātaka, v, p. 389.

² Visuddhimagga, i, p. 10.

³ Jātaka, v, p. 388f.

⁴ Mahābhārata, iii, 84.67.

⁵ Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, Chap. 57.

⁶ Barua, Gayā and Buddhagayā, i, p. 87f.

~~Vatasa~~ana. The Payāgā must have represented the confluence of the Gaṅgā and Yamunā at Prayāga (Allahabad).¹ The Gaṅgā and Yamunā do not need much comment. The Bhāgīrathī Gaṅgā flowed through Pañchāla dividing it into Uttara (Northern) and Dakṣiṇa (Southern), Kampilla, the capital of the latter standing on its right bank. The Yamunā served as a boundary between Śūrasena and Kośala and further down, between Vamśa (Vatsa) and Kośala, Madhura, the capital of Śūrasena and Kosambī, the capital of Vamśa standing on its right bank. The Sarabhū is to be identified with the Sarayū in the Rāmāyaṇa, on the left bank of which stood and still stands Ayodhyā, the ancient capital of Kośala (Uttara Kośala). The Aciravatī is modern Rāpti on the right bank of which stood Sāvattī (Śrāvastī), the third or last capital of Kośala.² The Mahī (Mahāmahī Gaṅgā) is a tributary of the Ganges; a river of this name is associated in the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa with the Pāripātra range.³ The Bāhumatī, Doṇa and Tīmbaru are still to be identified.

The Jaina Bhagavatī Sūtra and the Pali *Manorathapūraṇī*⁴ speak of a certain Mahāgaṅgā

¹ Barua, op. cit., i, p. 87.

² Law, Śrāvastī in Indian Literature, p. 9.

³ Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, Chap. 57.

⁴ Manorathapūraṇī (Sinhalese ed.), ii, p. 761r.

which was either the confluence of the Nerañjarā and the Mahānadī or the river Soṇa.¹ To the east beyond Prayāga the united flow of the Gaṅgā and Yamunā bore the name of Gaṅgā. It is this Gaṅgā which formed a boundary between kingdoms of Kāśī and Magadha. Bārāṇasī, the capital of Kāśī, stood on its left bank. Further down it formed a boundary between Videha and Vesālī on the north and Magadha,² Aṅga and Kajaṅgala on the south, on the right bank of which stood and still stand Pāṭaliputta, the second or last capital of Magadha and Campā, the capital of Aṅga. In the early Pali texts we have mention of three other rivers in Madhyadeśa that were of minor importance: Anomā, Rohiṇī and Kakutthā. The first was a river thirty leagues to the east of Kapilavatthu³ which obviously formed a boundary between the territory of the Śākya and that of the Mallas. According to the Lalitavistara, however, the distance of the river from the Śākya capital was six leagues only.⁴ The second, Rohiṇī, was a small river which divided the Sakyan and Koliyan territories.⁵ Cunningham identifies it with the modern Rowai

¹ Manorathapūraṇī (Sinhalese ed.), i, p. 761f.

² Majjhima, I, Vatthūpamasutta.

³ Jātaka, i, p. 64f.; Paramatthajotikā, II, p. 382; Malalasekera p. cit., i, p. 102.

⁴ Lalitavistara, ed. Lefmann.

⁵ Jātaka, v, p. 412; Paramatthajotikā, II, p. 358.

or Rohwaini, a small stream which joins the Rapti at Gorakhpur.¹ According to Dhammapāla, it flowed from north to south to the north-west of Rājagaha.² And the third, Kakutthā, was a river near Kusinārā³ which appears to have formed, at one point at least, a boundary between the two Malla territories. Other rivers mentioned are: Campā, Kosikī, Migasammata, Hiraññavatī, Sappinī, Sutanu, Salaṣavatī and Vettavatī. Of them, the Campā formed a boundary between Aṅga in the east and Magadha in the west.⁴ It is probably the same river as one to the west of Campānagar and Nāthnagar in the suburb of the town of Bhagalpur. The Kosikī, modern Kuśī, is just a branch of the Ganges.⁵ The Migasammata was a river which rising in the Himalayas flowed into the Ganges.⁶ The Hiraññavatī is the Little Gandak and the same as Ajitavati near Kusinārā which flows through the district of Gorakhpur about eight miles west of the Great Gandak and falls into the Ghogrā (Sarayū). On the bank of it once stood the Sal forest of the Mallas of Kusinārā.⁷

¹ Arch. Surv. of India, xii, p. 190f.

² Therīgāthā-aṭṭhakāṇḍā, i, p. 501; Malalasekera, op. cit., ii, p. 762.

³ Dīgha, ii, pp. 129, 134f.; Udāna, viii, 5.

⁴ Jātaka, iv, p. 454.

⁵ Ibid., v, pp. 2, *5, 6. The river is called Kosikā and Kosikigaṅgā.

⁶ Ibid., vi, p. 72.

⁷ Dīgha, ii, p. 137.

The Sappinī, modern Pañcāna, was a small stream at Rājagaha.¹ Similarly Sutanu was a small stream at Sāvattihī² which must have fallen into the Aciravatī. The Salaḥavatī (Sarāvatī in the Divyāvadāna, better Saraṇavatī), probably modern Suvarṇarekhā, formed, as we saw, the south-east boundary of the Middle country. And the Vettavatī, modern Betwa in Bhopal, is an affluent of the Yamunā on the bank of which stood the city of Vetravatī, and farther south-west, stands Bhilsā or ancient Vidisā.³

As regards the hills, mention is frequently made of Gayāsīsa, the principal hill of Gayā,⁴ which is the modern Brahmayoni and identical with what is called Gayaśira in the *Mahābhārata*⁵ and Gayāsira in the Purāṇas.⁶ The Pali commentaries account for the origin of its name by the striking resemblance of its shape with that of the head of an elephant (gajasīsa).⁷ The Mahābhārata speaks of twenty-five hills of Gayā including the Gayaśira, but the early texts of Buddhism ignore all but the Gayāsīsa. The hills called Prāgbodhi by Hiuen Tsang⁸ on the

¹ Aṅguttara, ii, p. 29.

² Saṃyutta, v, p. 297.

³ Jātaka, iv, p. 388.

⁴ Vinaya, i, p. 34f.; ii, p. 199.

⁵ Mahābhārata, iii, 95.9; Barua, op. cit., i, p. 74.

⁶ Barua, op. cit., i, p. 68.

⁷ Sāratthappakāsinī, iii, 4.

⁸ Beal, Buddhist Records, ii, p. 114.

other side of the Gayā river are vaguely referred to but nowhere mentioned by name.

In the Barābar Hill-Cave inscriptions of Aśoka and Patañjali's *Mahābhāṣya*¹ we have mention of a set of hills under the name of Khalatika. The same finds mention in the Mahābhārata, the Hāthigumphā and two other inscriptions as Gorathagiri or Goradhagiri from which one could have a view of Rājagaha or Giribbaja,² the earlier capital of Magadha. This group of hills came to be designated in some of the mediæval inscriptions as Pravaragiri which has given rise to the modern name Barābar.

The Pali Isigili Sutta names the five hills surrounding the city of Rājagaha, taking them in the very order in which they stood to each other and beginning with Isigili: Isigili, Vebhāra, Paṇḍava, Vepulla and Gijjhakūṭa.³ In the Theragāthā, verse 41, the Vebhāra and Paṇḍava are mentioned as two hills that stood side by side. The canonical order of the five names was changed in the commentaries, one of them enumerating them as Paṇḍava, Gijjhakūṭa, Vebhāra, Isigili and Vepulla,⁴ and another as Isigili, Vepulla, Vebhāra, Paṇḍava and Gijjhakūṭa.⁵ The Mahābhārata contains two lists, one

¹ Mahābhāṣya, i, 2.2.

² Mahābhārata, Sabhāparva, Ch. xx, v, 30.

³ Majjhima, iii, p. 68f.

⁴ Paramatthajotikā, II, p. 382.

⁵ Vimānavatthu-aṭṭhakathā, p. 82.

naming the five hills as Vaihāravipula, Vārāha, Vṛṣabha, Rṣigiri and Subhacaityaka,¹ and the other as Pāṇḍara, Vipula, Vārāha, Caityaka and Mātāṅga.² A comparison of the two lists may show that Vipula is the same name as Vaihāravipula, Caityaka is identical with Subhacaityaka, and Vṛṣabha and Mātāṅga are substituted respectively for Pāṇḍara (= Pali Paṇḍava) and Rṣigiri (= Pali Isigili), the name Vārāha being common to both the lists.³ By the name Caityaka or Subhacaityaka may have been meant no other hill than the Buddhist Gijjhakūṭa or Gṛdhrakūṭa.

The Jainas following a much later tradition of their own name locate the seven hills thus: 'If one enters Rajgir from the north, the hill which lies to the right is Vaibhāragiri; that which lies to the left is Vipulaparvata or Vipulagiri; the one which stands at right angles to the Vipula and runs southward parallel to the Vaibhāra is Ratnagiri; the one forming the eastern extension of the Ratnagiri is Chathāgiri, and the hill that stands next to Chathāgiri in continuation of Ratnagiri is Śailagiri. The one opposite to the Chathāgiri is Udayagiri; that which lies to the south of Rātnagiri and the west of the Udaya is Sonagiri. The Vaibhāra-

¹ Mahābhārata, II, 21.2.

² Itih., II, 21.11.

³ Law, Rājagṛhā in Ancient Literature, pp. 2f., 28f.

giri extends southward and westward ultimately to form the western entrance of Rajgir with the Sonagiri.¹

A list of seven hills may be made out from the Pali texts with the addition of Kāḷaśilā, a black rock on a side of Isigili,² and that of Paṭibhānakūṭa, an echoing peak with a fearful precipice (subhayānako papāto) in the neighbourhood of, Gijjhakūṭa,³ to the traditional list of five. These very texts speak of Indakūṭa near Gijjhakūṭa and Vedyaka hill, identified by Cunningham with the Giriyak, the latter containing the famous cave, called Indasāla-guhā⁴ (wrongly Sanskritised as Indraśaila-guhā). It may safely be maintained that the group of five Rajgir hills formed, as it now forms, the head, and the Vedyaka the tail of one and the same short range running from west to east over a distance of nine miles from Rajgir to the village of Giriyak or Giryek.

Among the five hills of Rājagaha all but the Isigili bore different names in different ages.⁵ The Vepulla mountain, for instance, was known in a very remote age by the name of Pācīna-vamśa and the people of the locality were then

¹ Law, op. cit., p. 3.

² Dīgha, ii, pp. 116-7.

³ Saṃyutta, v, p. 428.

⁴ Ibid., i, p. 206.

⁵ Dīgha, ii, p. 263; Sumaṅgalavilāsinī, iii, p. 697.

⁶ Majjhima, iii, p. 68f.

known as Tivaras. In the next stage the name of the hill was changed to Vaṅkaka, and that of the people to Rohitassas. In the third stage the hill received the name of Supassa and the people became known by the name of Suppiyas. It is in the fourth or last stage that the hill became known as Vepulla and the people by the name of Magadhas.¹

With the Pi-pu-lo (Vipula, better, Vaihāra-vipula) hill 'to the west of the north gate of' Rājagaha Hiuen Tsang associated five hundred hot springs of which several scores, some cold, some tepid, remained at his time. The source of them was traced to the Anotatta lake.² In the Jaina Vividhatīrthakalpa the Vaibhāragiri is described as the sacred hill affording the possibility of the formation of kuṇḍas of tepid and cold water (taptasīlāmbukuṇḍāni). The Pali and Epic traditions, too, speak of hot springs in connection with Rājagaha,³ while Buddhaghosa definitely refers them to the Vebhāra hill.⁴

The Indasālaguhā in the Vedyaka hill was not the only cave in the Rajgir or Giryek range. The Rājagaha hills abounded in guhās and kandarās, caves and crevices, sufficient to offer accommodation, according to the Vinaya

¹ Samyutta, ii, p. 190f.; Law, op. cit., p. 32.

² Watters, Yuan Chwang, ii, pp. 153-4.

³ Sāratthappakāśinī, i, p. 38.

⁴ Ibid.

Cullavagga,¹ for five hundred brethren. Among the caves, those worthy of mention were the Pippali (or Pippali) and Sattapaṇṇi, both associated with the Vebhāra hill. Both of them were situated on the north side of this hill.² And among the crevices, those enjoying importance were these four: Kapota-kandarā, Gomāṭa-kandarā, Tinduka-kandarā and Tapoda-kandarā.³ The Pāsāṇaka-cetiya was a holy rock not far from Rājagaha.⁴

Besides these hills there were in the Middle country some natural forests (svayaṃjātavanā) and some hill-tracts. The Kurujāṅgala, for instance, was a wild region in the Kuru realm which extended as far north as the Kāmyaka forest and which in all likelihood separated the Kuru realm from Pañcāla. According to one tradition, the kingdom of Uttarapañcāla was founded in this very jungle tract. The Pārileyyakavana was an elephant-forest at some distance from the city of Kosambī and on the way to Sāvattthī.⁵ The Añjanavana at Sāketa, the Mahāvana at Vesālī and the Mahāvana at Kapilavatthu were natural forests. The latter Mahāvana lay in one stretch up to the foot of

¹ Vinaya, ii, p. 76.

² Udāna, i, 6; iii, 7; Dīgha, ii, p. 116f.

³ Udāna, iv, 4; Law, op. cit., p. 11.

⁴ Sutta-nipāta, verse 1013.

⁵ Saṃyutta, iii, p. 95; Vinaya, i, p. 352; Udāna, iv, the Himalayas.¹ The Lumbinīvana, a village in the time of Aśoka, situated on the bank of the Rohiṇī on the Kapilavatthu side, was a similar forest.² The Nāgavana, an elephant-forest at Hatthigāma in the Vajjī realm,³ the Sālavana of the Mallas at Kusinārā,⁴ the Bhesakaḷāvana at Sumsumārāgira in the realm of the Bhaggas,⁵ the Simsapāvana at Kosambī,⁶ the one to the north of Setavyā in Kosala,⁷ the one near Ālavī and the Pipphalivana of the Moriyas⁸ may be cited as other typical instances of natural forests. The Ālavī (Ardhamāgadhi, Ālabhī), identified by Cunningham and Hoernle with Newal or Nawal in Unao district in U.P. and by Nandolal Dey with Aviwa, 27 miles north-east of Etawah,⁹ was, as its name implies, a forest tract and formed a Yakṣa principality.¹⁰ Similarly Kajaṅgala, which lay to the east of Aṅga and extended from the Ganges in the north-east to the Salalavatī or Suvarṇarekhā in the south-east, was an extensive hill-tract in the Mid-land. The

¹ Sumaṅgalavilāsinī, i, 309.

² Jātaka, i, p. 52f.; Kathāvatthu, pp. 97, 559; Manorathapūraṇī, i, p. 10.

³ Aṅguttara, iv, p. 213.

⁴ Dīgha, ii, p. 146f.

⁵ Wrongly spelt Sumsumārāgiri. Majjhima, i, p. 95; ii, p. 91, etc.

⁶ Saṃyutta, v, p. 437.

⁷ Dīgha, ii, p. 316.

⁸ Ibid., ii, p. 164f.

⁹ Law, Geography of Early Buddhism, p. 24.

¹⁰ Raychaudhuri, op. cit., pp. 160-1.

Viñjhātavi represented the forests surrounding the Vindhya range, through which lay the way from Pāṭaliputta to Tāmalitti.¹ According to Buddhaghosa, it was then a forest without any human habitation (agāmakam araññaṃ).²

Over and above the natural forests and jungles there were hundreds and thousands of private and royal gardens and parks, and in some of the parks the deer, set at liberty, roamed about freely. The migadāya (mṛgadāva) at Isipatana near Benares, the one at Maddakucchi in Rājagaha, and that at Bhesakalāvana were three among the notable deer-parks. Besides the tanks, large and small (taḷāka-pokkharāṇī) and wells (kūpā, udapānā), in which the Mid-land abounded, there were several natural pools (jātasaras) and lakes (dahas), though none of them were so very important as to find mention by name.

It may, perhaps, be safely premised that the realms visited by the Buddha were all included by the Buddhists in their Middle country. Such realms were Kuru and Pañchāla in the west and north-west, Vamśa or Vatsa in the west and south-west, Kāśī and Kosala in the middle, the Sakya and Koliya in the north, the Vajji and Malla in the east and north-east, and Āṅga;

¹ Mahāvamsa, xix, 6; Dīpavamsa, xvi, 2.

² Samantapāsādikā, iii, p. 655.

Magadha and Kajaṅgala in the east and south-east. The Buddhist Mid-land may be shown to have constituted the upper Gangetic valley between the Himalayas in the north and the Vindhya (Pali Viñjha) range in the south. Within this area the Pali texts include a few other small tracts, such as the Rāmagāma of the Koliyas, the Pippalivana of the Moriyas, the Allakappa (Ādrakalpa) of the Bulis, Veṭṭhadīpa the native land of the Brahmin Doṇa, the realm of Bhaggas,¹ and the Kesaputta of the Kālāmas.² According to the Mahāgovinda Suttanta, Mahāgovinda, the Brahmin chaplain to king Reṇu, divided his empire into seven separate kingdoms with their respective capitals as named below:

1. Kaliṅga, capital Dantapura.
2. Assaka, capital Potana.
3. Avantī, capital Māhissatī.
4. Sovīra, capital Roruka.
5. Videha, capital Mithilā.
6. Aṅga, capital Campā.
7. Kāśī, capital Bārāṇasī.³

Of these, the last three only were included in the Majjhimadesa.

Kururaṭṭha: The Kuru kingdom which extended from the Sarasvatī to the Ganges

¹ Digha, ii, p. 164f.

² Anguttara, i, p. 188.

³ Digha, ii, p. 320f.

consisted of these three parts: Kurujāṅgala, the Kuru-land proper and Kurukṣetra.¹ According to Pali tradition, the people originally coming from Uttarakuru, colonised it, whence the name Kuru. In the Mahābhārata (i, 109.10) it is aptly called Dakṣiṇakuru, vying as it did with Uttarakuru in its glory, splendour, prosperity and righteousness. The Kurujāṅgala, as its name implies, was the jungle tract of the Kuru-land which extended as far as the Kāmyaka forest. There is a tradition to the effect that the kingdom of Uttarapañcāla was founded in this very part of Kuru, in which case it must have stood on the left bank of the Bhāgīrathī Gaṅgā. It is, therefore, not astonishing at all that in the Somanassa Jātaka Uttarapañcāla finds mention as a city in the Kururatṭha.² The kingdom proper had Hastināpura for its capital,³ Indrapatta (Indraprastha) near modern Delhi, according to the Jātakas.⁴ The kingdom was three hundred leagues in extent, and its capital seven hundred leagues in circumference.⁵ The Taittirīya Āraṇyaka locates Kurukṣetra to the north of Khāṇḍava, to the south of the Tūrghna and to the east of the Parīṇa,⁶ while the Great Epic definitely places it to the south

¹ Mahābhārata, i, 109 l.

² Jātaka, iv, p. 444.

³ Dvyāvadāna, p. 435.

^{4, 5} Jātaka, v, pp. 57, 484, vi, p. 255.

⁶ Vedic Index, i, p. 169f.

of the Sarasvatī and the north of the Dṛśadvatī, between Taruntuka and Arantuka and between the lakes of Rāma and Macakruka.¹ In Pali we have mention of Kammāsadamma (also spelt, Kammāsadhamma),² and Thullakoṭṭhita³ as its two townships (nigamā). The Jātakas even speak of two townships by the name of Kammāsadhamma, one distinguished from the other as mahā from cūla.⁴ The commentaries have their own ingenious explanation for the origin of the name of the first township.⁵ But it should be noted that another spelling of its name is Kammāsadamma, a name which suggests that the place was a training ground of draught-horses. According to Buddhaghosa, the second township was called Thullakoṭṭhita because its granaries were always full (thullakotṭham, paripunṇa-kotṭhāgāraṃ).⁶ The Jaina Uttarādhyāyana Sūtra speaks of another ancient, wealthy, famous and beautiful town, named Isukāra after its ruler Isukāra ('the Arrow-maker').⁷

Pañcāla: This country was divided into two kingdoms: Uttarapañcāla and Dakṣhiṇapañcāla,

¹ Mahābhārata, iii, 83.204.

² Dīgha, ii, pp. 55, 290; Majjhima, i, pp. 55, 501; Saṃyutta, ii, p. 92.

³ Majjhima, ii, p. 54; Manorathapūraṇī, i, p. 144.

⁴ ⁵ Jātakas, v, pp. 35, 411.

⁶ Paṇḍarāśādanī, ii, p. 722. Cf. Avadānasātaka, ii, p. 118.

⁷ Uttarādhyāyana, xiv, 1; Raychaudhuri, op. cit., 4th ed., p. 113.

the Bhāgīrathī forming the dividing line between them.¹ The northern Pañcāla had its capital at Ahicchatra² (Adhicchatrā in Āṣāḍhasena's inscriptions), identified with modern Ramnagar in the Bareilly district. According to the Somanassa Jātaka, its capital Uttarapañcāla bore the same name as the janapada.³ The capital of Dakkhiṇapañcāla was Kampilla (Sk. Kāmpilya) which is identical with modern Kampil in the Farokhabad district. In the Kumbhakāra Jātaka, however, Kampilla, situated on the right bank of the Ganges, is wrongly described as the capital of Uttara-pañcāla.⁴

Vaṃsa (Vatsa): This country, called Vatsa-bhūmi in the Mahābhārata,⁵ was, as Hiuen Tsang knew it, about 6,000 li in circuit, and its capital, Kauśāmbī, about 30 li. 'It was a fertile country with a hot climate; it yielded much upland rice and sugarcane; its people were enterprising, fond of the arts, and cultivators of religious merit.'⁶ In the Lalitavistara, however, its inhabitants are criticised as 'rude and rough' (prākṛtaṃ cha

¹ Malalasekera, op. cit., ii, p. 108.

² Mahābhārata, Ādiparva, Ch. 140.

³ Jātaka, v, p. 444.

⁴ Ibid., iii, p. 379.

⁵ Mahābhārata, ii, 30.

⁶ Watters, op. cit., i, p. 366.

caṇḍam cha).¹ The Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (viii, 14.3) places it, together with Uśīnara, Kuru and Pañcāla in the Dhruvamadhyamā dik (i.e. Madhyadeśa). The Āṅguttara Nikāya describes it as a land which was very rich and prosperous,² while the Arthasāstra testifies to the high quality of its cotton fabrics.³ Kauśāmbī which was all along its capital is rightly identified by Cunningham with the present village of Kosam on the right bank of the Yamunā. Even apart from retaining the name of Kosambī, Kosam is situated on a bank of the Yamunā as it should be according to Pali tradition. The present distance by road of about 100 miles from Benares to Kosam is the distance of 13 yojanas suggested by Fa Hien.⁴ According to Hsien Tsang, a way from Prayāga (Allahabad) to Kauśāmbī lay through a jungle and bare plains covering seven days' journey on foot.⁵ Kosam is about 30 miles from Allahabad across the fields and 137 miles by road above the Yamunā. At a distance of about 2½ miles north-east of Kosam is the village of Pabhosā where two caves were dedicated to the Kassapiyas by a king of Ahicchatra.

¹ Lalitavistara, ed. Lefmann, p. 21.

² Āṅguttara, iv, pp. 252, 256, 260; Manorathapūraṇī, i, p. 306f.;
Spence Hardy, Manual of Buddhism, p. 501.

³ Śamaśāstra's Tr., p. 94.

⁴ Watters, op. cit., i, p. 367.

⁵ Watters, op. cit., i, p. 366.

In a modern Jaina dedicatory inscription the hill of Pabhosā is placed just outside the town of Kauśāmbī (Kauśāmbī-nagarabāhya-Prabhāsācalopari). At Kosambī were two famous gardens known as Ghositārāma and Pāvārikambavana.¹

There was a reserve-forest of Pārileyyaka in Vatsa (rather in Ceti) the way to which from Kosambī lay through the village of Bālakalona-kāra and Pācīnavamsadāya. Pārileyyaka itself stood on a road from Kosambī to Sāvattthī.²

The Vinaya Cullavagga (xii) records a journey on foot from Kosambī to Ahogaṅga (Adhogaṅga) hill, from there to Soreyya, from Soreyya to Saṃkassa (Saṃkissa), from there to Kaṇṇakujja (Kanauj), from Kaṇṇakujja to Udumbara, from there to Aggalapura, and from Aggalapura to Sahajāti up to which the country-boats could ply. The Vinaya Piṭaka (iii, p. 1f.) records also similar journey from Verañjā to Benares via Soreyya, Saṃkassa and Kaṇṇakujja after crossing the Ganges at Payāgapatitthāna.

Bhagga: This was the land of the Bhaggas (Bhargas) which became a dependency of Vatsa with Sumsumārāgira as its chief town.³ The name of its capital is generally spelt as Sumsumāragiri. But Buddhaghosa expressly says that the city was called Sumsumāragira on account of the fact that while it was being founded, the shriek of a sumsumāra (crocodile) was heard.¹ If the spelling giri be correct, the city must have been built either round or in the vicinity of the Sumsumāra hill. The location of Bhagga is not as yet settled, though Dr. Malalasekera places it between Vesālī and Sāvattthī² without citing any evidence for it. In the Mahābhārata,³ too, the Bharga State is associated with Vatsa. In the Apadāna, Bhagga is mentioned along with Karusa (Kartūsa),⁴ which latter is referred in the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa to a neighbourhood of the Vindhya range.⁵

¹ Vinaya, i, p. 337f.; Majjhima, i, p. 320; Dīgha, ii, p. 81.

² Ibid., i, p. 352f.; Saṃyutta, iii, p. 95; Uddāna, iv, 5; Majjhima, i, p. 320; Jātaka, iii, p. 489, etc.

³ Majjhima, i, p. 332; Anguttara, ii, p. 61; vi, p. 85; Vinaya, ii, p. 127.

Cetiratṭha: The country of the Cetis or Cedis lay near the Yamunā, contiguous to that of the Kurus. It may approximately be identified with the modern Bundelkhand and adjoining region. In the Cetiya Jātaka Sotthivatī,⁶ probably identical with the Śukti or Śuktimatī of

¹ Papañcasūdanī, i, Sinhalese ed., p. 292

² Malalasekera, op. cit., ii, p. 345.

³ Mahābhārata, ii, 30.10-11; Raychaudhuri, op. cit., p. 159. Also Harivaṃśa, 29.73.

⁴ Apadāna, ii, p. 359.

⁵ Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, Chap. 57.

⁶ Jātaka, (Fausbøll), iii, pp. 454-461.

the Mahābhārata,¹ is mentioned as its capital. Sahajāti² finds mention as a township of Ceti, which probably stood on the right bank of the Yamunā. Sahañcanika³ appears to have been another township, but according to Dr. Malalasekera,⁴ the name is evidently a wrong reading of Sahajāti. There was a Deer Park in the village of Pācinavaṃsa,⁵ which, as its name implies, lay to the east of Vatsa, next to the village of Bālakaloṇakāra on the side of the Vatsa kingdom. The Vessantara Jātaka⁶ mentions one Cetaraṭṭha, situated 30 yojanas from the Jetuttara-nagara, through which lay a way to the Himalayan region. This latter Ceti country is sometimes identified with the territory covered by the kingdom of Nepal.

Kāśī: This is one of the most ancient kingdoms in Northern India, with Bārāṇasī (modern Benares) as its capital, twelve yojanas in extent.⁷ The city stood, as it now does, on the left bank of the Ganges, and it was known by different names in different ages: Surundhana, Sudassana, Brahmavaḍḍhana, Pupphavatī, Ramma and Molinī.⁸ In Pali texts it is predicted

¹ Mahābhārata, iii, 22350; xiv, 83.2.

² Aṅguttara, iii, p. 355.

³ Saṃyutta, v, p. 436f.

⁴ Malalasekera, op. cit., ii, p. 1080.

⁵ Aṅguttara, iv, p. 223f.

⁶ Jātaka, vi, p. 514f.

⁷ Ibid., vi, p. 160.

⁸ Ibid., iv, pp. 15, 119.

to be the future capital of Jambudvīpa. According to Brahmanical literature, the city derived its name from Asi and Baruṇā,¹ the two small streams bounding it on the south and the north respectively. The country was noted as a great centre of trade, most populous and prosperous at the same time. One high way connected it with Rājagaha² and another with Sāvattthī.³ It was noted for its silk cloth⁴ and for perfumes (Kāśī-vilepana, Kāśī-candana).⁵ Vāsabhagāma, Macchikāsaṇḍa, Kīṭāgiri and Dhanapālagāma are mentioned as notable places. Of them Kīṭāgiri was 'a very fertile tract with abundance of rain-water enabling it to yield three harvests of food-grains'.⁶ Cundaṭṭhila (Cundavīla) finds mention in the Petavatthu, iii, i, as a village near Benares but on the other side of the river (Baruṇā?) and between Vāsabhagāma and Benares. A locality of this name finds mention in one of the Barhut inscriptions.⁷ The most important place near Benares in the history of Buddhism is the Deer Park at Isipatana (Rṣipatana, modern Sarnath) eighteen leagues from Uruvelā, the place of the Buddha's Enlightenment and three or four miles to the

¹ Cunningham, op. cit., pp. 435-6.

² Vinaya, i, p. 212.

³ Ibid., ii, p. 10.

⁴ Jātaka, vi, p. 151.

⁵ Ibid., i, p. 355; Anguttara, iii, p. 391.

⁶ Barua in J.H.Q., x, p. 63.

⁷ Rama and Sinha. Barhut Inscriptions

north of the present city of Benares. The old Deer Park still exists about five miles from Sarnath. The ancient city of Benares was a great centre of trade and industry and trade relations existed between it on one side and Sāvattthī and Takkasilā on the other.¹

Kosala: A distinction is to be made between Kosala as a janapada and Kosala as an empire. The former was the Kosala proper. The latter comprised five territories including Kosala proper,² the remaining four being Kāsī with Benares as its capital, Ālabhī (Pali Ālavī) with its capital at Ālabhī, Uttarapañcāla having Kampillapura (better, Ahicchatra) for its capital, and another with Polāsapura as its capital.³ Here we are concerned with the country of Kosala proper which was divided into Uttara and Dakkhiṇa, evidently by the Sarabhū (Sarayū) serving as a wedge between them. The Rāmāyaṇa and the Vāyu Purāṇa speak of two Kosalas, Northern and Southern, the former with Śrāvastī as its capital and the latter having Kuśāvati for its capital, Ayodhyā (Pali Ayojjhā) being the earlier capital of the undivided kingdom.⁴ The Rāmāyaṇa locates Kuśāvati, the

¹ Dhammapada-aṭṭhakathā, i, p. 123; iii, p. 429.

² Samyutta, i, p. 80, speaks of pañcarājāno Pañcādi-pamukhā Cf. Journal Asiatique, Juillet—Sept., 1923,—Levi, S.—Pre-Aryan et Pre-Dravidian dans l'Inde.

³ See Uvāsaga-dasāo discussed in Law's S'r̥dvast, p. 12.

⁴ Rāmāyaṇa, vii, 120.7; 121.4-5; Vāyu Purāṇa, 88, 209.

capital of Dakṣiṇa-Kosala at the foot of the Vindhyas. This may have been precisely the city which under the name of Ayodhyā is associated in the Jambudīva-panṇatti with the Vāitādhyā range along which there were sixty Vidyādhara towns (saṭṭhiṃ Vijjhāharanagarā-vāsā),¹ referred to also in the Hāthigumphā inscription of Khāravela as Vijādharādhivāsā. Besides Ayojjhā and Sāvattthī, Sāketa, too, has been mentioned in some of the early Buddhist texts² as the capital of Kosala, the northern Kosala. Sāketa is said to have stood on a high road between Sāvattthī and Kosambī,³ at a distance of seven relay drives of royal chariots (satta-ratha-vinītāni).⁴ Sāvattthī was called Sāvattthī either because it was founded near the hermitage of the sage Savattha or because of its great prosperity as a city.⁵ It stood on the right bank of the Aciravatī (modern Rapti).⁶ There is much to be said in favour of Dr. Barua's suggestion that the great trade-route from Rājagaha to Sāvattthī branched off into two roads, one the Dakkhināpatha or Southern (better, South-western) Road, and the

¹ Jambudīva-panṇatti, i, 12.

² Jātaka, iii, p. 270; Mahāvastu, i, p. 34.

³ Sutta-nipāṭa, verses 1011-1013.

⁴ Majjhīma, i, p. 149.

⁵ Law, Geography, p. 5f.

⁶ Law, Stravastī, p. 9.

other Uttarāpatha or Northern (better, North-western) Road, each lending its name to the region through which it lay.¹ Ukkatṭhā² was an important town in Kosala besides Sāvattthī and Sāketa, and Naṅgaraka,³ a township bordering on the Sakya territory, Uḷumpa or Medaḷumpa being the adjoining township on the Śākya side. Setavyā on the high road between Kapilavatthu and Sāvattthī was the headquarters of a chieftain.⁴ Among other towns, mention may be made of Daṇḍakappaka,⁵ Nālakapāna⁶ and Paṅkadhā.⁷ The Pali texts speak of a few famous Brahmin villages, such as Manasākata (probably the same as Manavasītikaḍa of the Soghaura plate), Ekasālā, Iochānaṅgala, Opasāda, Nagaravinda and Venāgapura.⁸ As for other localities, these preserve the names of Torānavatthu on the road between Sāvattthī and Sāketa,⁹ Palāsavana, a woodland at Nālakapāna, Caṇḍalakappa,¹⁰ and Nālandā.¹¹

¹ Barua, Old Brāhmī Inscriptions.

² Dīgha, i, p. 81.

³ Majjhima, ii, Dhammacetiya Sutta.

⁴ Sutta-nipāta, verses 36-38; Dīgha, ii, p. 316.

⁵ Anguttara, iii, p. 402.

⁶ Ibid., v, p. 122.

⁷ Ibid., i, p. 236.

⁸ Law, Geography, p. 4; Malalasekera, op. cit., i, p. 696; Law, Sāvastī, p. 11.

⁹ Saṃyutta, iv, p. 374.

¹⁰ Majjhima, ii, p. 209.

¹¹ Samvutta, iv, p. 322.

At the south gate of Sāvattthī and within a distance of about two miles from it was the famous garden of Prince Jeta, at its east gate lay the site of the Pubbārāma built by Visākhā, and in its neighbourhood stood the Ekasāla-katinduka grove of Queen Mallikā.¹ The Jaina Bhagavatī Sūtra mentions the settlement of Saravaṇa as the birth-place of Gosāla.²

The Sundarikā, probably not far from Sāvattthī, was a sacred river in Kosala besides the Sarabhū and Aciravatī. The river Sadānīrā (modern Gaṇḍakī) formed a boundary in the east between Kosala and Videha.³

Magadha: The kingdom or country roughly corresponding to the modern Patna and Gayā districts of Behar was broadly divided into two khetas: Gayā and Magadha⁴ from a religious, and may be also from a fiscal point of view. In the Jambudīva-paññatti the latter is distinctly called Māgahatitthakhetta. The Ganges formed a natural dividing line between Kāsī in the west and Magadha in the east, as well as between Magadha in the south and Videha

¹ Sumaṅgalavilāsinī, ii, 365.

² Law, Śrāvastī, p. 26.

³ Law, Śrāvastī in Indian Literature, p. 13.

⁴ Paramatthajotikā, II, p. 301: Gayā ti gāmo pi tittiham pi vuccati; Therīgāthā-aṭṭhakathā, p. 225: Magadharaṭṭhe Bodhimāṇḍa; Lalitavistara, Mitra's Edition, XVII, 309: Māgadhakānaṃ Gayā; Paramatthajotikā, II, p. 583: Magadhakhetto pāsānakacetiye; Barua, Gayā and Buddhagaṇḍā, i, p. 83f.

and Vesālī in the north. The river Campā (modern Chāndan) formed a boundary on the east side between Magadha and Aṅga. As for the two khetas of Gayā and Magadha, it may be said that Gorathagiri (Aśoka's khalatika-pavata) affording a distant view, as it did of Rājagaha, stood just on the borderland of Magadha towards Gayā. The Gayā proper, the holiest place of ancient India, comprised three divisions, all located along the left bank of the Nerañjarā and the Gayā river (i.e. Phalgu): Uruvelā, Nadī (the meeting-place of the Nerañjarā and the Mahānadi), and Gayā. According to the Mahābhārata, the Gayā division contained twenty-five hills (enumerated in the Vāyu Purāṇa), of which the Gayāśīra (modern Brahmayoni hill) was the main. As clearly implied in the Gayāmāhātmya the hills of Gayā formed the head of a very old range of hills with its navel at Yājpur in Orissa and southern extremity at Mahendragiri. The distance, by road from Gayā to Uruvelā (modern Bodhagayā) was three gāvutas (six or seven miles) then as now.¹ The Uruvelā division on the banks of the Nerañjarā contained Senānigāma or Senānigama (identified by Blösch with the present village of Urel) and Nala, the native village of Buddhaghosa, the great Pali commentator.

¹ 'Bodhimaṇḍato la Gayā ithe, Bārāṇasī aṭṭhasasāyōjanāni

According to Hiuen Tsang, 'the Uruvelā of yore' extended north and east 14 or 15 li at least from a point near the base of the Gayāśīrṣa hill on the other side of the Phalgu. In its southern extension it was outskirted by an extensive jungle tract of Vaṅkahāra janapada (roughly identical with Hazaribagh district).¹ The way from Gayā to Benares lay through such localities as Aparagayā, Vaśālā, Cundadvolā, Lohitavastu, Gandhapura and Sārathipura on the right bank of the Ganges, opposite to the city of Benares.²

The earlier capital of Magadha was Rājagaha, also known as Giribbaja. Hiuen Tsang knew it as Kuśāgrapura (ku-she-ka-lu-pu-lo), a name corresponding to Kuśāgrapura, met with in such late works as the Mañjuśrīmūlakalpa and Jaina Vividhatīrthakalpa.³ According to the Mahābhārata, the city abounded in lodhra grass. Besides the five hills, the guhās, kandaras, tapedas, etc., already discussed in connection with Rājagaha, mention also may be made of the Corapapāta, the precipice down which the thieves were thrown, the Sappasonḍikapabbhāra, the tank called Sumāgadha, Moranivāpa, a feeding ground of the peafowls. The Latṭhivana (Yaṣṭivana) was either a bamboo-forest or palm-grove on a road between Rājagaha and Uruvelā.¹ Other localities of importance near about Rājagaha, a city provided with sixty-four gates,² the four of which were main, were Veluvana, the Bamboo-grove of Bimbisāra, Jīvaka's Mango-grove, the Royal pleasure at Ambalaṭṭhikā on the high road from Rājagaha to Vesālī, and Pāvārika's Mango-grove at Nālandā (identified with the present village of Burgaon). Ekanālā finds mention as a famous Brahmin village at Dakkhiṇagiri.³ Nālaka was a village in Magadha. The Jaina Bhagavatī Sūtra speaks of a village by the name of Siddhatthagāma.⁴ The Jainas lay the scene of Mahāvīra's demise at Pāvāpurī on the Bihar Sarif-Nawadah road. The village of Pāṭaligāma stood on the right bank of the Ganges, on the same high road, opposite Koṭigāma, a locality in an extremity of the Vajji territory. Pāṭaligāma having been fortified, gave rise to the city of Pāṭaliputta, the second and later capital of Magadha which suffered thrice from the action of water, fire and earthquake.⁵ The Dhammapada-Commentary (iii, p. 439f.) places Rājagaha at a distance of five leagues from the Ganges. The country of Māgadha comprised as many as eighty thousand villages.

¹ Barua, Gayā and Buddhagayā, i, p. 106.

² Mahāvastu, iii, p. 324f. ; Barua, op. cit., i, pp. 115-6.

³ Law, Rājāgrha, p. 1.

¹ Law, op. cit., pp. 16-17.

^{2, 3} Law, op. cit., p. vi.

⁴ Rockhill, Life of the Buddha, p. 250.

⁵ Dīgha, ii, 88.

⁶ Vinaya, i, p. 179.

Āṅga: The kingdom or country of Āṅga, 4,000 li in extent according to Hiuen Tsang, lay to the east of Magadha, separated from the latter by the river Campā. On the north it was bounded by the Ganges. Āṅga, as described in the Mahābhārata, may be supposed to have comprised the districts of Bhagalpur and Monghyr. Its capital Campā on the right bank of the Ganges, formerly known by the name of Mālinī,¹ stood at a distance of sixty yojanas from Mithilā.² Bhaddiya and Assapura are two other cities that find mention.³ Āpaṇa is mentioned as a township in Āṅguttarāpa, a tract which lay 'north of the river Mahī, evidently a part of Āṅga on the other side of that river'.⁴ The way from Bhaddiya to Āpaṇa lay through Āṅguttarāpa.⁵ Āṅga was a prosperous country and Campā was undoubtedly one of the most flourishing cities and a great centre of trade and commerce. In its neighbourhood was the famous tank of Gaggarā.⁶

Kajaṅgala: The country of Kajaṅgala formed an eastern boundary of the Middle country just beyond which was a Brahmin village of Mahāsālā.

¹ Mahābhārata, xii, 5.6-7: Yā Mālinyabhavat purā. Also Matsya Purāṇa, 48.97; Vāyu, 99.105; Harivamśa, 81.49.

² Jātaka, vi, p. 32.

³ Majjhima, i, p. 271; Dhammapada-aṭṭhakathā, i, p. 384.

⁴ Malalasekera, op. cit., p. 22; Paramatthajotikā, II, p. 437.

⁵ Vinaya, i, p. 243f.; Dhammapada-aṭṭhakathā, iii, p. 363.

⁶ Digha, i, p. 111; Sumaṅgalavilāsinī, i, p. 279.

The Divyāvadāna, as already pointed out, fixes the Puṇḍakakṣa hill as its eastern boundary beyond which was Puṇḍravardhana in North Bengal, also included in the Mid-land. But there is no justification in saying that the country of Kajaṅgala, with its chief town of the same name, was in any sense identical with Puṇḍravardhana. According to Hiuen Tsang,¹ the country of Kajaṅgala, 2,000 li in circuit, was bounded on the north by the Ganges; the kingdom of Puṇḍravardhana could be reached from its capital by journeying about 600 li eastward across the Ganges. Kajaṅgala was a prosperous place where food was easily available (dabbasambhārā-sulabhā).² The *Aṅguttara Nikāya*³ speaks of a Bamboo-grove at the town of Kajaṅgala, while in the Majjhima Nikāya, we have mention of another locality named Mukheluvana.⁴ At the south-east of this country was the river called Salaṣavatī.

Sumbha: This was the land of the Sumbhas with Setaka, Sedaka or Desaka as its chief town.⁵ Dr. R. C. Majumdar inclines to identify Sumbha with Suhma (modern Midnapore district). But the location of the tract is uncertain.

¹ Beal, Buddhist Records, ii, p. 193f.

² Jātaka, iv, p. 310f.

Aṅguttara, v, p. 54f.

⁴ Majjhima, iii, p. 298.

⁵ Samyutta, v, p. 89; Jātaka, i, p. 393.

Vajjī territory: It appears to have comprised the principalities of eight¹ or nine² allied clans. The names of all of them are nowhere given; these are left only to be inferred. The Pali works expressly speak of Vajjigāma,³ a locality of the Vajjis near about Vesālī. Vesālī (modern Besarh in the Muzaffarpur district of North Behar) was the headquarters of the Licchavis. The city was rich, prosperous and populous. 'It had 7,707 storied buildings, 7,707 pinnaced houses (kūṭāgāras), 7,707 ārāmas, and 7,707 lotus ponds',⁴—too symmetrical to be accepted as a fact. It was encompassed by three walls at a distance of a gāvuta from one another each provided with gates and watch-towers. The early Jaina texts locate Kuṇḍagāma, the seat of power of the Nātas in a suburb of Vesālī.⁵ The country of the Bhaggas is placed between Vesālī and Sāvattthī.⁶ Videha (modern Tirhut), the land of the Videhas, with Mithilā as its capital, was bounded by the Kosikī in the east, the Ganges in the south, the Sadānirā in the west, and the Himalayas in the north.⁶ Cunningham identi-

¹ Sumaṅgalavilāsinī, ii, p. 519: an inference drawn from the expression apṭhakulikā.

² Kalpaśūtra, sec. 128; Nirayāvalī Sūtra: an inference drawn from the expression navamallakī.

³ Saṃyutta, v, 348, etc.

⁴ Vinaya Texts, ii, 171; Lalitavistara, ed. Lefmann, Ch. iii, p. 21.

⁵ Ācārāṅgaśūtra, Jaina Sūtras, SBE., vol. xxii, pp. x-xi.

⁶ Law, Geography of Early Buddhism, pp. 7, 30, 31.

fies Mithilā with Janakapura, a 'small town within the Nepal border, north of which the Mozaffarpur and Darbhanga districts meet'.¹

The high road connecting Rājagaha with Kapilavatthu passed through such places in the Vajjī territory as Koṭigāma on the left bank of the Ganges, Nādikā, Vesālī, Hatthigāma, Ambagāma and Jambugāma. There was a natural forest called Mahāvana in the neighbourhood of Vesālī.² Mithilā, the capital of Videha, had at each of its four gates a market town of the Yavamajjhaka shape.³

Ukkācelā (but not Ukkāvelā, met with as a variant) was a Vajjian town on the left bank of the Ganges.⁴

Malla country: The kingdom or country of the Mallas,⁵ stated to be nine in the Jaina canonical texts, comprised in theory nine territories, one of each of the confederate clans. But the Pali canonical texts bring into prominence the territories of just two of them, one with its headquarters at Kusinārā (Kusinagara) and other with Pāvā as its chief town. The first abutted, on the Śākya territory and the second on the Vajjī. Bhoganagara was a Malla

¹ Law, Geography of Early Buddhism, pp. 7, 30, 21

² Sumangalavāṇīśinī, i, 309.

³ Jātaka, vi, p. 330.

⁴ Maṅgala, i, p. 225; Saṃyutta, iv, p. 261f.; Paṇḍitaśāstrī, Sinhalese ed., i, p. 447.

⁵ Kalpasūtra, §128; Nirayāvalī Sūtra.

town between Jambugāma and Pāvā on the high road connecting Vesālī with Kapilavatthu.¹ The river Kakutthā formed the boundary between the two territories, for after crossing it one could reach the Sal grove of Kusīnārā on the river Hiraññavatī. Kusīnārā which was just a daub town was in bygone ages the most flourishing and magnificent city of Kusāvati, 12 leagues in length from east to west and 7 leagues in breadth from north to south.² Anupiya or Anupiyā was another Malla town, evidently on the same high road, between Kusīnārā and the river Anomā,³ the latter serving as a dividing line between the Śākya and Malla territories. The Uruvelakappa was yet another Malla town. In the neighbourhood stood Mahāvana which was an extensive forest.⁴ Of the two cities of Pāvā and Kusīnārā, the first may probably be identified with Kasia on the smaller Gandak and to the east of the Gorakhpur district, and the second with the village called Padaraona, 12 miles to the north-east of Kasia. Hiuen Tsang's journey from Kuśīnagara to Benares covering a distance of 500 li lay through a great forest.⁵

¹ Dīgha, i, p. 123; Sutta-nipāta, verses 1012-13.

² Ibid., ii, p. 146f.

³ Jātaka, i, pp. 85, 140, Dīgha, iii, p. 1, Vṃaya, ii, pp. 180, 184.

⁴ Saṃyutta, iv, pp. 327, 330, v, p. 228, Aṅguttara, iv, p. 438.

⁵ Real, Buddhist Records, ii, p. 43.

Śākya and Koliya territories: The Śākya territory lay to the east of Kośala and due south of the Himalayas. It was then rich and prosperous.¹ Where it bordered on the kingdom of Kośala, there was the Sakya town Uḷumpa or Medaḷumpa, opposite the Kosalan town of Naṅgaraka. Kapilavatthu (identified by Rhys Davids with Tilaura, two miles from Tauliva in the Nepal Terai), was the capital of the Śākyas. According to Hiuen Tsang, the city was situated to the south-east of Sāvattthī, at a distance of 500 li or so from the latter.² It was situated on the high road which passed through Setavyā to connect it with Sāvattthī.³ Among other towns, mention is made of Cātumā, Sāmagāma, Sakkara, Silavatī and Khomadussa.

The Koliyas were distinguished as those of Devadaha and those of Rāmagāma.⁵ Accordingly they possessed two territories. That of the former was separated from the Śākya territory by the river Rohiṇī. On the bank of this river on the Śākya side stood Lumbinivana, the birth-place of the Buddha, mentioned in Aśoka's inscription as Lumminigāma, the modern village of Rummindei, only 10 miles to

¹ Sutta-nipāta, verse 1012.

² Beal, op cit., II, p. 118.

³ Sutta-nipāta, verse 1012.

⁴ Law, Geography, p. 28.

⁵ Dīgha, II, p. 164.

the east of Kapilavatthu and 2 miles to the north of Bhagavānpur.¹ Devadaha on the other side of the Rohiṇī (Hiuen Tsang's Tailavāha ?) was the seat of government of the first Koliyan territory. Rāmagāma, the second Koliyan territory, lay, according to Hiuen Tsang, to the east of Kapilavatthu, at a distance of about 300 li across a wild jungle.² In order to reach Kusinārā from it, the pilgrim had to walk north-east through a great forest, along a dangerous and difficult road, where wild oxen, herds of elephants, and robbers, and hunters caused incessant trouble.³ In the neighbourhood of Kapilavatthu was the famous pleasance of Nigrodha.

Pipphalivana: This is described as the land of the Moriyas. It is well-nigh impossible to offer any definite suggestion for its identification. One may be even tempted to find an echo of its name in that of Piprāvā, a village in the Birdpur Estate in the district of Basti.⁴ But a Buddhist tradition connects it with Himatala,⁵ which, if correct, may lead one to think that it lay somewhere in the kingdom which came to be known by the name of Nepal.

¹ Law, Geography, p. 30.

² Beal, op. cit., ii, p. 25.

³ Ibid., ii, p. 31.

⁴ Vinaya, i, 82; Jātaka, i, p. 88f.

⁵ Law, Geography, p. 29.

⁶ Mahāvamsaśāstrā Sinhalese ed. v. 180

Allakappa and Veṭṭhadīpa: The first is mentioned as the land of the Bulis and the second as the native land of a Brahmin called Doṇa. In the Dhammapada commentary, both of them are called kingdoms, the first being ten leagues in extent.¹ The Sanskrit form of the first name would be Ādrakalpa, and that of the second Veṣṭadvīpa. Hiuen Tsang locates the site of Dronastūpa,² that is to say, of Veṭṭhadīpa, 100 li south-east of Mahāsāra (Pali Mahāsālā, Mahāsāla), identified by St. Martin with Masār, a village six miles to the west of Arrah. But the Brahmin village of Mahasālā is located in Pali texts to the east of Kajaṅgala in the eastern extremity of the Majjhimadesa.³ As for the identification of Allakappa, relying only on a verbal similarity of names, fancy may choose between Arrah on the right bank of the Ganges and Adra on the B.N. Railway.

Kesaputta: In the Aṅguttara Nikāya (i, p. 188) the Kālāmas are associated with a place called Kesaputta, which is a name apparently similar to Pāṭaliputta, Seriyāputa (Barhut Inscriptions), Satiyāputa and Keralaputa (Aśoka's R.E. II). Buddhaghosa, however, suggests that both Kālāma and Kesaputta were nigamā or townships,¹ without telling us where these were actually situated. The Kesaputtas may remind one of the Kesins, a people connected in Pāṇini (VI, 4.165) with the Pañcalas and Dālbyhas.

¹ Dhammapada-aṭṭhakathā, i, p. 161.

² Beal, Buddhist Records, ii, p. 66.

³ Vinaya, i, p. 197; Jātaka, i, p. 49.

Ālavī: This is the name of both the country and its principal town. The Ardhamāgadhī spelling of the name is Ālabhī. The town was thirty yojanas from Sāvattthī² and twelve from Benares,³ and it lay between Sāvattthī and Rājagaha. The way from Sāvattthī to Ālavī and thence to Rājagaha lay through Kīṭāgiri.⁴ Mrs. Rhys Davids inclines to think that Ālavī was on the bank of the Ganges,⁵ evidently basing her suggestion on the fury of the Yakkha Ālavaka who would throw the Buddha over to the other side of the Ganges (pāra-Gaṅgāya), which, however, is treated by Dr. Malalasekera as merely a rhetorical expression without any geographical significance.⁶ Ālavī as a principality was undoubtedly included in the Kosalan empire.

II Pubbanta or Prācya (Eastern India):
The Pubbanta or Prācya may be defined as the extreme eastern part of India which lay to the

¹ Manorathapūraṇi: Kālāmānaṇṇi nigamoṇi Kālāma nāma Khatthiyā tesam nigamo. Kesaputtiyā ti Kesaputtinigamavāsino.

² Paramatthajotikā, II, p. 220.

³ Watters, Yuan Chwang, ii, p. 61.

⁴ Vinaya, ii, p. 170f.

⁶ Psalms of the Brethren, p. 408, f.n. 5.

⁶ Malalasēkera, op. cit., i, p. 296.

east of the Mid-land. The eastern boundary of the Mid-land changed, as we saw, from time to time, from Prayāga to Kāsī, from Kāsī to Kajaṅgala, and ultimately from the latter to Puṇḍravardhana. The only locality to the east of Kajaṅgala which was included in the Mid-land was the Brahmin village of Mahāsālā or Mahāsāla which has not as yet been satisfactorily identified. Its south-east boundary was formed by the river Salalavatī (Sarāvati) to be identified either with the Silai (Sīlavatī) which taking its rise in the Chotanagpur hills and being united with the Dalkisor (Dvārikeśvarī) flows down as the Rupanarayan¹ through the districts of Bankura and Midnapore, or with the Svarṇarekhā or Suvarṇarekhā which also taking its rise in the Chotanagpur hills flows down through the districts of Manbhum and Midnapore. The Jaina Ācārāṅga Sūtra speaks of Lāḍha (Rāḍha) as a pathless country with its two divisions: Subbhabhūmi (probably the same as Sk. Suhma) and Vajjabhūmi,² which may be taken to correspond to the modern district of Midnapore. The country of Lāḍha, thus identified extended from the south-east corner of the Mid-land to the Bay of Bengal and lay just to the north-east of Kalinga. If the Subbhabhūmi of the Ācārāṅga be identical with the Suhma of the Mahābhārata

¹ Law, Geography, p. 68.

² Jacobi, Jaina Sūtras, i, p. 84.

(ii, 30.25) it may be taken to have formed then the upper or northern division of the district of Midnapore, while Vajjabhūmi with Tāmalitti (Tāmrālipta, modern Tamruk on the western bank of the Rupnarayan), the lower or southern division. Tāmalitti (also spelt as Tāmalitthi), which seems to have stood formerly at the mouth of the Ganges, was a great sea-port town of the time. It is said that Aśoka reached it from Pāṭaliputta by crossing the Ganges and then traversing the Viñjhāṭavī.¹ Sumbha mentioned in the early Pali texts with Setaka, Sedaka or Desaka as its important town would seem to have been a locality other than one corresponding to Subbha or Suhma. Hiuen Tsang speaks of a Śvetapura, obviously the same name as the Pali Setaka, which lay within the Vajji territory, 80 or 90 li south from the neighbourhood of Vesālī.²

As for Puṇḍra or Puṇḍravardhana (identified with the modern district and town of Bogra), it lay, according to the Divyāvadāna, to the east of the Puṇḍakakṣa (Puṇḍrakakṣa) hill, and according to Hiuen Tsang, about 100 li east from the northern end of Kaṇḍāla across the Ganges, say, from the isolated hill at Sakrigalli. A Brāhmī inscription on a circular stone seal of the Maurya Age, found at Mahāsthāngarh near the town of Bogra, mentions Puṇḍra as a beautiful and prosperous town.¹ The way to the city of Puṇḍravardhana from Kajaṅgala must have been through the place now covered by the district of Malda. This is precisely the route from North Behar to Puṇḍra indicated in the Mahābhārata (ii, 30.21-22).

¹ Law, Geography, p. 68.

² Beal, op. cit., ii, p. 75.

Vaṅga² finds mention in the Mahāniddesa (pp. 155, 415) as an important centre of trade and commerce, and in the Bhagavatī Sūtra and Pali chronicles as a country or kingdom. In the Mahābhārata (ii, 44.9), Vaṅga is placed contiguous to Aṅga. It is evident even from the Pali canonical texts that Vaṅganta or western extremity of Vaṅga bordered on Aṅga-Magadha. According to the Pali chronicles, the district of Lāḷa (equated with Lāṭa of Western India) was situated between Vaṅga on one side and Kaliṅga on the other.³ Thus the name Vaṅga in its earlier denotation may be taken to have represented central Bengal extending as far west as the eastern end of Kajaṅgala. Subsequently, say from the time of the Imperial Guptas, Vaṅga, as might be ascertained from the Mahābhārata (ii, 30.23), came to denote Eastern Bengal proper, practically identical with Hiuen Tsang's Samatata. Suvannakūṭa mentioned in the Mahāniddesa

¹ D. R. Bhandarkar in E.J.

² For details, vide B. C. Law, Ancient Indian Tribes, vol. II, Ch. I.

³ Dīpavaṃsa, p. 54; Mahāvamsa, p. 56.

(pp. 155, 415) as another centre of trade and commerce appears to have been the same place as Suvannakuḍya in the Arthasāstra which Bhaṭṭasvāmi locates in Kāmarūpa.¹

III Himavanta-padesa (Himalayan region): According to all Indian traditions, Buddhist, Jaina and Brahmanical, Jambudvīpa as the southern continent extended to the north up to the southern side of Mount Sumeru placed in the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa in the middle of a country called Ilāvṛta containing two mountain ranges, the western called Mālyavat and the eastern known as Gandhamādana. The Purāṇa locates the four mountains: Mandara, Merumandara, Supārśva and Kumuda on the east, south, west and north sides of Sumeru respectively. The river Jambu taking its rise in the Merumandara mountain, flows down through the Ilāvṛtavarṣa.² The Niṣadha (Pali Nisabha)³ mountain range is placed to the south of the Ilāvṛtavarṣa to the south of which lay the country of Harivarṣa. In between Bhāratavarṣa and Harivarṣa are placed the Himalayan range and the Hemakūṭa, the former lying to the south of the latter. This is also the setting of the countries and mountain ranges to be found in the Jambudīva-paṇṇatti and Mahābhārata.

¹ N. N. Das Gupta in Indian Culture, vol. v, p. 339.

² Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, Ch. 57.

³ Jātaka, vi, pp. 204, 212; Apadāna, i, p. 67.

The Hemakūṭa region is also known as Kimpuruṣavarṣa, the land of the Kimpuruṣas, and the Haimavata region as Kinnarakhaṇḍa, the land of the Kinnaras.¹ Uttarakuru or northern continent, which is the romantic kingdom of Kuvera, is placed alike in the Pali texts and the Mahābhārata on the north side of Mount Sumeru.

According to Pali tradition, however, the Himalayan region extended to the north up to the Gandhamādana range. The Pali descriptions of the ranges and their setting are rather clumsy and far from systematic; these are moreover silent as to the existence of Harivarṣa and the rest. But as in the Purāṇas, so in the Jātakas the Kinnaras, Kimpuruṣas and Vidyā-dharas are associated with the Himalayan mountains. Besides Nisabha (Niṣadha), the Apadāna names a few other mountains in the neighbourhood of the Himavanta: Kadamba (p. 382), Kukkura (p. 155, better Kukkaṭa, p. 178), Kosika (p. 381), Gotama (p. 162), Paduma (p. 362), Bhārika (p. 440), Bhūtagaṇa (p. 179), Lambaka (p. 15), Vasabha (Vṛṣabha, p. 166), Vikāṭa (p. 227), Samaṅga (p. 437) and Sobhita (p. 328).² Of the lakes mentioned, the most important was, of course, the Anotatta or Mānas-sarovār, associated with the Kelāsa and Cittakūṭa peaks. The Jambudīva-pannatti seems right in suggesting that this really consisted of two lakes, each called Mahāpadma-hrada, one connected with the Kṣudrahimavanta or Western Himalayan range, and the other connected with the Mahāhimavanta or Eastern Himalayan range. Of the four rivers channeling out from this lake, Gaṅgā that flowed down southwards branched off into five main rivers of Majjhimadesa, Rohitā flowing eastwards may be identified with the Lauhitya or Brahmaputra, Sindhu flowing northwards with the Indus, and one flowing westwards with the Sutej.

¹ Law, Geographical Essays, p. 116.

The Himalayan region was penetrated by the tāpasas (hermits), vanacarakas, migaluddakas (hunters), and kings on hunting expedition. The hermits and ascetics built many hermitages there. Some of the Jātakas and Apadānas contain most charming and romantic descriptions of the hermitages and of the fauna and flora that were really the fauna and flora of Jambudvīpa as a whole. The hollows in the mountains and hills served as dens for lions, tigers, etc. The beasts generally lived near about the rivers, lakes, and springs. The Pali works speak of four species of lions: (1) those resembling the cow, pigeon-coloured and eating grass; (2) black lions; (3) light yellow lions; and (4) those possessing a big mane. Among other members of the feline species, mention is constantly made of vyagghā (ordinary tigers), ḍīpī (panthers), taracchā (hyenas), acchā or bhallukā (bears), majjārā (cats). These speak also of kukkuras or sunakhas (dogs). The khaggā or palāsadā (rhinoceros), gavajā (gayals), usabhā (bulls), mahisā (buffaloes) and diverse species of deer (migā)¹: the ruru, rohanta, tipallattha, citta, pasada, nigrodha, sākha, eṇi, and the rest. We have mention also of ajā (goats) and eḷakā (rams). The Himalayan forests are said to have abounded in elephants living in herds or as rogues, distinguished as vāmanika (dwarfish), uccākaḷārikā, uccākaṇerukā, and chaddantā (six-tusked). The last-mentioned class are associated with the Chaddanta lake and noted for the high quality of the ivory. They contained horses (assā) of diverse breeds, the sindhu and valāha being the two best of them. They abounded also in such reptiles and ajagarā (pythons), nāgā or sappā (snakes) divided into four families of virūpakkha, erāpatha, chavyāputta and kaṇha. They do not fail also to refer to the water-snakes feeding on green frogs (bhekā) and godhā (iguanas). The rivers were habitats of sumsumārā (porpoises and crocodiles), kumbhīlā (alligators), makarā, ogāhā and tantiggāhā. The rivers and lakes were full of fish: pāṭhīnā, muñjarohitā, maggurā and the like, and kuḥirakā or kakkataḥkā (crabs, small and monstrous). The birds were numerous: cakravāḥkā (ruddy geese), haṃsā, ravihaṃsā, kadambā (nīlahāṃsā), jīvamjivakā, sweet-voiced kokilā and karavikā, vakā and koñcā (cranes, herons), kosikā (owls), kālakannikā (birds of ill omen), kākā (crows), kapotā or pārevatā (doves and pigeons), kuṇālā, kurarā, supaṇṇā or garulā (kites, eagles), giḃḃhā (vultures), kakutthā (phasianus gallus), vattakā, laṭukikā, diṇḍibhā (partridges), and above all, sikhī or morā (peacocks). Of the trees, mention may be made of nigrodhā (banyan), assatthā (peepul), udumbarā (fig), amba (mango), jambu (rose-apple), panasa (jackfruit), sirīsa (shorea robusta), nāga (mesua ferrea), haritaka (terminalia chebula), āmalaka (phyllanthus emblica), vibhīṭaka (terminalia belerica); of the creepers, āsāvatiḥlatā, atimutta (mādhaviḥlatā); of kadali (banana), mātiluṅga (citron); of the flower trees, campaka, ketaka (castus speciosus). The lakes were decked with the uppala (lilies, white, red and blue), paduma (lotus with one hundred petals) and punḍarikā (lotus with one thousand petals).¹

¹ JRAS, 1888—Animals classed as deer in the ³Jātakas, p. 542

IV Uttarāpatha or Udīcya (North-western India): This part of India extended west and north-west from the Brahmin village of Thūṇa or from Pṛthudaka (modern Pehoa), that is to say, from a place near about Thaneswar. It was bounded on the north and west by the belt of the western Himalayan range called Kṣudrahimavanta reaching down to the Arabian sea. It may be said that the region of Uttarāpatha lay to the north of Aparānta and the west of the Buddhist Mid-land, and was watered by the Himalayan rivers forming the Indus group. Defined in these terms, the region may be taken as identical with what is called Udīcya in the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, and approximately with Manu's Brahmvarta and Brahmarshideśa. The important janapadas that are referred in this Purāṇa to this region include, among others, Aparānta, Śūdra, Gāndhāra, Yavana, Sindhu, Sauvīra, Madra, Pārada, Kekaya, Kāmboja, Darada, Pahava, Barbara, Vāhlika and Kāśmīra.¹ In Pali literature Kāṃsabhoga with Asitañjana as its capital,² Kasmīra-Gandhāra and Kamboja³ are definitely placed in Uttarāpatha. According to Brahmanical tradition, the Kāṃsa-territory was the kingdom of Mathurā,⁴ i.e., Sūrasena of which Mathurā was the capital in the time of Mahāvīra and Buddha. The Yona, Kamboja and Gandhāra are included,

¹ Law, Apadāna in JEBRAS., xiii, 1937, p. 236; Barua, Barhut, iii, pp. 85, 586.

¹ Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, Ch. 57.

² Jātaka, iv, p. 79.

³ Aṅguttara, iv, pp. 252, 256, 260; Vinaya, iii, p. 6; Samañta-pāsādikā, Sinhalese ed., i, p. 179.

⁴ Raychaudhuri, op. cit., 4th ed., p. 119.

as we saw, in some of the Pali canonical lists of important countries. These three are the countries that are referred in Aśoka's R.E. V to Aparānta or western end of Jambudvīpa, Gandhāra may be taken to have comprised the whole of the districts of Peshawar (Puruṣapura) and Rawalpindi in the northern Punjab. Its capital Takkaṣilā (modern Taxila) was both a centre of trade and an ancient seat of learning. According to the Jātakas, its distance from Benares was 2,000 leagues. Kasmīra is not other than the modern State of Kashmere and Jammu which lies to the east of Peshawar and Rawalpindi. The location of Yona and Kamboja is not finally settled. Evidently they must have been localities near about Kasmīra-Gandhāra. Other places mentioned in early Pali texts and to be included in Uttarāpatha are the countries of Vajirā,¹ Suddaka, Khuddaka, Madda, Alasanda, Pallava, Bāhika and Babbara.² Of these, the city of Vajirā is obviously no other than what finds mention in the Bodhi-sattvāvadāna-Kalpātā (p. 4) as Vajrāvati and is placed in Uttarāpatha. The Mahābhārata (ix. 37.1) definitely locates the land of the Suddakas (Śūdrakas) in western Rajputana where the Sarasvatī disappears (yatra naṣṭā Sarasvatī). But the Greek historians place the

¹ Buddhaṃsa, xxviii, 8; Dīpaṃsa, p. 27

² Apadāna, ii, p. 359.

Sodrai in the western part of the Punjab. The land of the Khuddakas (Sk. Kṣudrakā,¹ Greek Sudracae, Oxydrakai) which is placed in the Greek accounts between the Hydraotes (Ravi) and the Hyphasis (Bias), may be located in the district of Montgomery.² Madra was the country of the Sivi which had Sāgala (Sk. Sākala,³ modern Sialkot) as its capital; the river Irāvati flowed through it.⁴ Alasanda (variant Allasanda) was a city in the Yona country which is mentioned in the Mahānidāsa as a centre of trade and commerce.⁵ The Greek equivalent of the name would be Alexandria. In the Milindapañha Alasanda is described as a dīpa,⁶ which has led scholars to suggest that it was 'an island in the Indus in the territory of Baktria'.⁷ But according to Dr. Geiger, it was probably 'the town founded by the Macedonian king in the country of Paropanisadae near Kabul'.⁸ The fact seems to be this that Alasanda was both the name of a country and its chief town. In the Mahānidāsa (pp. 155, 415) it is mentioned just after Yona

¹ Mahābhārata, II, 52.15; VII, 68.9.

² Raychaudhuri, op. cit., p. 205.

³ Mahābhārata, II, 31.119.

⁴ Matsya Purāṇa, 114.7, 15-18.

⁵ Mahānidāsa, pp. 155, 415.

⁶ Milinda, pp. 82, 327, 331, 359.

⁷ Rhys Davids, The Questions of King Milinda, S.B.E., I, p. xxiii.

⁸ Mahāvamsa, English translation, p. 194, f.n. 3.

and Paramayona. Further, it would seem that Sāgala which was formerly the capital of Madda became afterwards the capital of a Yona kingdom. The Pali texts also speak of the two lands of Sindhu and Sovīra, each of which is described as a great centre of trade and commerce. Here Sindhu, also mentioned as a kingdom, may be easily identified with the province of Sind on the Arabian sea. In the Mahāgovinda Suttanta Sovīra has been described as a kingdom with Roruka as its capital. It was probably situated between the Indus and Jhelum. The story of Serissaka in the Peta and Vimānavatthus definitely tells us that the way of the caravan merchants (Satthavāhā) from Aṅga and Magadha to Sindhu-Sovīra lay across a great desert, which was no other than the desert in Rajputana. Some rivers and ranges of hills had to be crossed with difficulty (nadiyo pana pabbatānaṃ ca duggā).¹ The desert is described in the Vaṇṇupatha Jātaka as a sandy desert, sixty leagues in extent (saṭṭhiyojanikaṃ marukantāraṃ).² Among the rivers that had to be crossed the commentary mentions the Candabhāgā (Chenab) by name.³ Immediately after Allasanda and Marukantāra, the Mahāniddesa (pp. 155, 415) introduces such places of importance from the point of view of trade and commerce as Janṇupatha (corrected as Vaṇṇupatha), Ajapatha, Menḍapatha, Saṅkupatha, Chattapatha, Vamsapatha, Sakunapatha, Mūsikāpatha, Daripatha and Vettādhāra (variant Vettacara, Vettacāra). That the Vaṇṇu, Vettacara and Saṅkupatha are mentioned as roads (maggam) in the Serissaka Vimāna-story¹ has led Dr. Barua to suggest that these were originally names of different parts of Uttarāpatha taken in the sense of the north-western trade-route, and that like it they lent their names to the regions across which they lay.² These, as convincingly shown by Sylvain Levi and others, became subsequently connected with a trade-route connecting Suvarṇabhūmi with Suvarṇadvīpa.³ But even on the evidence of Pāṇini's commentators who introduce some of these names⁴ in connection with the Sūtra, v, 1.77: Uttarapathenāhr̥tañca, it may be established that they were associated with a journey to and from Uttarāpatha.

¹ Vimānavatthu, p. 78.

² Jātaka, i, p. 107; p. 109: vaṇṇu vuccanti mahāmagge ti attho.

³ Vimānavatthu commentary (vii, 10), p. 338.

The Pali Babbara is no other than Barbara which is associated in the Mahābhārata (xii,

¹ Vimānavatthu commentary, vii, 10, p. 338.

² Barua, Old Brāhmī Inscriptions.

³ Études Asiatiques, II, p. 45f.; R. C. Majumdar, Suvarṇadvīpa, p. 56f.

⁴ Vārti-jāṅgala-sūhala-kāntārāja-saṅku-pūrvāc ca

207.43) with Yauna, Kamboja, Gandhāra and Kirāta and placed in Uttarāpatha. Babbara or Barbaricum is described in the Periplus as a market-town of Minnagara on the Erythraean sea.¹ Pallava may be identified with Pahlava (Parthia) in the *Mahābhārata*² and Bahika with Vāhika.³ The Divyāvadāna mentions a city by the name of Utpalavatī in Uttarāpatha,⁴ which may be easily identified with Puṣkarāvati or Puṣkalāvati. Puṣkalāvati (modern Parang and Chārsada, 17 miles north-east of Peshawar on the Swat river) was one of the two most important cities in Gandhāra.⁵ Kekaka or Kekaya is another country with its capital of the same name which finds mention in the early Buddhist and Jaina texts. According to the Rāmāyaṇa (ii, 68.19-22; vii, 113.14), 'the Kekaya territory lay beyond the Vipāsā and abutted on the Gandharva or Gandhāra-ṣaṣaya', and its 'metropolis was Rājagṛha'.⁶ In the Jaina Rāyapaseṇi, Seyaviyā (Pali Setavyā) is described as a city in the kingdom of Kekaya,⁷ while in the Pali canonical texts it is located in Kosalā and on

¹ Raychaudhuri, op. cit., 4th ed., p. 362.

² Hopkins, Great Epic of India, p. 393f.

³ Pāṇini, iv, 2.117: Vāhika-grāmebhyas ca.

⁴ Divyāvadāna, p. 470.

⁵ Rāmāyaṇa, vii, 114.11; Vāyu Purāṇa, 88.189-90.

⁶ Raychaudhuri, op. cit., pp. 52-53.

⁷ Indian Antiquary, 1891, p. 375; Raychaudhuri, op. cit., p. 54.

the high road between Kapilavatthu and Sāvattthī.

The Apadāna mentions the Sindhu (Indus), Vitamsā (Vitastā), and Candabhāgā (Chenab) among the important rivers of Uttarāpatha, and points out that the Gaṅgā Bhāgīrasī (Bhāgīrathī) taking its rise in the Himalayas, flowed by the gate of Hamsavatī, which was an ancient city in Uttarāpatha. The Amarikā was a river which flowed down from the foot of the Samaṅga mountain belonging to the Himalayan range.

V Aparānta or Paścāddeśa (Western India): This may be taken to represent that part of Western India which lay to the west of the Buddhist Mid-land and to the north and south respectively of the Dakkhiṇāpatha and Uttarāpatha. According to the Kāvya-mīmāṃsā, as we noted, the region extended westward from Devasabhā (identified with modern Dewas in the Central Indian States Agency). From the Buddhist definition of the Middle country it may be inferred that Aparānta extended westward from the western side of the kingdom of Vatsa. Bhagawanlal Indraji took Aparānta to be the western sea-board of India. The Bhoja and Rāṣṭra countries that are referred in the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa to the Vindhya region are mentioned in Aśoka's R.E. V, as examples of countries in Western India.

(Aparānta). The Kāvya-mīmāṃsā mentions, among others, Devasabhā, Surāṣṭra, Bhṛgu-kaccha, Kaccha, Ānarta and Arbuda as representative countries of Aparānta. The Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa offers a longer list containing the names of such countries as Sūrpāraka, Kosala (South Kosala), Vidisā, Pulinda, Nāṣika, Marukaccha (Bhṛgukaccha), Kaccha, Surāṣṭra and Avantī.¹ To them we may add Śūrasena and Matsya which may as well be referred to Uttarāpatha. According to Hiuen Tsang's account, Western India seems to have comprised 'Sindh, Western Rajputana, Cutch, Gujarat and a portion of the adjoining coast on the lower course of the Narmadā'.²

The most important among the countries in Aparānta was Avantī which formed one of the three maṇḍalaś of Jambudīpa, the other two being Pācīna and Dakkhiṇāpatha.³ It appears to have been divided by the river Vettavatī into north and south, the north having its capital at Ujjenī (modern Ujen), and the second at Māhissatī (Māhiṣmatī, later known as Gonaddha). It is probably the second part which has been described as Avantī Dakkhiṇāpatha.⁴ Both

¹ Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, 57.

² Cunningham, Ancient Geography, p. 690.

³ Rhys Davids, The Questions of King Milinda, S.B.E., ii, p. 250, f.n. 1.

⁴ D. R. Bhandarkar, Carmichael Lectures (1918), p. 54.

Ujjenī and Māhissatī stood on the Southern High Road extending from Rājagaha to Patitṭhāna via Vesālī, Kapilavatthu,¹ Sāvattihī and Kosambī.²

Kuraraghara was a town in Avantī adjoining the Papātapabbata.³ Among other localities, mention may be made of Ghanaselapabbata, Makkarakaṭa, Veḷugāma⁴ and Sudassanapura.⁵ The country or kingdom may be taken to have corresponded roughly to 'modern Malwa, Nimar and adjoining parts of the Central Provinces'.⁶ Vedisa or Vedisagiri (identified by Cunningham with the modern Bhilsa in the Gwalior State, 26 miles north-east of Bhopal) lay on the road to Ujjenī, at a distance of fifty yojanas from Pāṭaliputta.⁷ Second in importance to Avantī was the kingdom or country of Sūrasena with Madhurā, Mathurā, modern Muttra on the right bank of the Yamunā as its capital. Sūrasena, often mentioned with Kaccha, is placed to the south of the Kuru country. The way from Sāvattihī to Madhurā lay through an important locality called Verañjā. Maccha (Sk. Matsya)

¹ JRAS., 1906, p. 453, ibid., 1898, p. 533.

² Sutta-nipāta, v, 1014-13

³ Saṃyutta, iii, pp. 9, 12, iv, p. 115f, Aṅguttara, v, p. 46

⁴ Malalasekera, op. cit., ii, p. 935.

⁵ Law, Geography, p. 22.

⁶ Law, Geography, p. 22.

⁷ Mahābodhi-vamsa, p. 98.

⁸ Law, Geography, p. 20.

⁹ Malalasekera, ii, p. 980, generally mentioned with Sūrasena is to be located to the south or south-west of Indapatta and to the south of Sūrasena. Its capital was Virāṭa-nagara (modern Bairāt) where a copy of Aśoka's Minor Rock Edict was engraved. It may be supposed to have comprised the State of Jaipur and included the whole of the State of Alwar with a portion of Bharatpur.¹ Surāṭṭha was another important country in Aparānta which was watered by a river called Sātodikā.² Its capital was Girinagara (modern Girnar in Kathiawad) containing as it does a whole set of Aśoka's Rock Edicts. The Sunāparanta or Aparānta is identified by the late Sir R. G. Bhandarkar with the modern Konkan. Its capital was Suppāraka, a highly important sea-port on the Arabian sea, modern Sopārā in the district of Thānā near Bombay. The Bharukaccha (Sk. Bhṛgukaccha) was another very important sea-port town on the Arabian sea which is identified with the modern Broach in Kathiawad and identical with the Barygaza of Ptolemy and the Periplus.³ Bhoja, the territory of the Bhojaputtas, sixteen in number, may be identified with the modern Berar. The town of Satakannikā which is mentioned as the south-western boundary of the Buddhist Mid-land has not been as yet identified. If this spelling of the name be correct, it may be taken to have represented the place of origin of the Śātakarnis.

^{1, 2} Law, Geography, 19, 59, 56-57.

³ Saṃyutta, i, p. 61f.; Jātaka, i, p. 45; Law, op. cit., p. 62.

VI Dakkhināpatha or Dākṣiṇātya (Deccan): This represents South India which, according to the Kāvya-mīmāṃsā, extended southward from Māhīmatī identified with Māndhātā on the Narmadā. According to the Jambudīva-parṇatti, as we noted, it was the southern half of India to the south of the Vaitādhya or Vindhya range. From the Buddhist definition of the Mid-land, it appears that this part of Jambudīpa lay to the south of the river Salālavatī and the town of Satakarnikā. The Godāvarī and Narmadā regions are definitely placed in Dakkhināpatha. Besides the Narmadā and Godāvarī, the early Pali texts mention these two rivers of South India: Kāverī and Kāṇṇapennā (Sk. Kṛṣṇabehnā).¹ The former is the famous river Kāverī which flowed into the sea through the Coḷa country of which we have a most patriotic description in the writings of Buddhadaṭṭa.² The Kāṇṇapennā was a river in the Mahīśaka country or Mysore.³ Patitṭhāna (modern Paithan) on the Godāvarī is described as the southern terminus of the Southern High

¹ Jātaka, v, p. 162f.

² Buddhadaṭṭa's Manuals, PTS.

³ Malalasekera, op. cit., i, p. 498: 'At the bend of the river and near its source was the mountain Candaka'.

Road extending from Rājagaha. It was situated near about the modern Pañcavaṭī at Nasik. On the banks of the Godhāvarī (Godāvarī) and at the point where it formed a doab stood the two Andhra kingdoms of Assaka (Sk. Asvaka, Asmaka) with its capital at Potali or Potana (Paudanya of the Mahābhārata, i, 77.47), and Alaka or Muḷaka, the latter standing to the north of the former.¹ The Pali texts speak also of Kolapaṭṭana which was a harbour, probably on the Coromandel coast.² In the Apadāna (ii, pp. 358-59) we have mention of the Andhaka (Andhra) and Damiḷa (Drāviḍa) countries. Siddhattha, Rājagiri, Pubbasela and Aparasela were all localities near about the Andhaka seat of power,³ i.e., in the neighbourhood of Dhanakaṭaka or Amarāvati. The Damiḷa territories, as represented in the Pali chronicles, included the countries of Coḷa with Kañcīpura (modern Conjeeveram) as its capital, Pāṇḍya with Madhurasuttapaṭṭana (modern Madoura) as its chief town, and Kerala (Chera⁴) which was no other than Asoka's Keralaputra. Kalinga finds mention in several texts both as a

¹ Sutta-nipāta, verse 1011.

² Mūlindapañha, p. 359.

³ Kathāvatthu-aphakathā, quoted in 'Points of Controversy', pp. 5, 104; Law, The Debates Commentary (PTS), p. 62f.

⁴ Cūlavamsa, iii, 9; iv, 5, 12. Cf. S. K. Aiyangar, South Indian Culture (The Cultural Heritage of India, III, p. 71).

kingdom and a country with its capital at Dantapura (Pālura of a Nāgārjunikoṇḍa inscription), situated near Chicacole on the Bay of Bengal. But the Apadāna (ii, pp. 358-59) mentions at the same time Oḍḍa (Oḍra) and Okkala (Sk. Utkala) representing two distinct parts of Orissa. The Mekala country which finds mention in the Apadāna was probably a tract of land comprising the modern Amara-kaṇṭhaka hills and adjoining locality. The Telavāha is mentioned in the Jātaka (i, p. 111) as a river in the Serivaratṭha near Andhapura.

CHAPTER II

KINGS AND PEOPLES

The Dīgha Nikāya contains this prophecy of the Buddha that when the advent of the future Buddha, Metteyya, will take place on earth, 'Jambudīpa will be pervaded by mankind even as a jungle is by reeds and rushes'.¹ The 'teeming millions of India' is indeed an oft-recurring phrase of the present day. In dealing with the peoples of Jambudvīpa we are not, however, to deal with the teeming millions of India as such but only as divided into various tribes or nations ruling themselves or being ruled by kings. By way of a general description of the ninth dvīpa of the Bhāratavarṣa, i.e., of India proper, the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa locates the Kirātas in the eastern (better, north-eastern) extremity, the Yavanas in the western (better, north-western),² and the rest of the peoples in the remaining parts of India.

As for the Himalayan region, the Purāṇas refer the Kinnaras to the Haimavatavarṣa, the Kimpuruṣas to the Hemakūṭavarṣa and the Yakṣas to some regions, the main home of the

¹ Dīgha, iii, p. 75.

² Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, Chap. 57: Pūrve kirātā yasyānte, pācīme Yavanāḥ smṛtāḥ.

Yakṣas being Uttarakuru or Northern continent forming the kingdom of Kuvera Vaiśravaṇa. The Kinnaras, Kimpuruṣas and Yakṣas¹ figure as semi-human beings, the first two representing the two branches of one and the same stock of people. This is in substance and details the description of them as offered in the early texts of Buddhism.

The words, Kinnara and Kimpurisa, are employed in Pali, precisely as in Sanskrit, as synonyms.² According to the Amarakoṣa, the Kinnaras or Kimpuruṣas have a human form which is ugly because of having a face like that of a horse, and are, therefore, known also as aśvamukhāḥ or turaṅgavadanā; the heavenly musician, Tumburu, belongs to the race of Kinnaras or Kimpuruṣas.³ In Pali, on the other hand, the heavenly musician is represented by Pañcasikha who belongs to a class of demigods called Gandhabbā. As the Kinnaras or Kimpurisas figure in the Pali Jātakas, they were rather of a human or infrahuman race⁴ than of a suprahuman origin. Like the deer, they

¹ Kern, Manual of Indian Buddhism, pp. 59-60.

² Jātaka, iv, p. 252f.

³ Amarakoṣa, Svargavarga, 71: Kinnaraḥ Kimpuruṣas turaṅgavadano mayuḥ.

⁴ Jātaka, iv, p. 252: Na-y-ime devā na pi Gandhabbaputtā, miḡā ime turaṅgānagatā; iv, p. 439: miḡā manussaṃ vā nibhāsa-vapṇā, 'animals in a human form'.

lived on leaves, flowers and fruits of trees¹ and put on garments of leaves or of flowers.² They preferred to live in a beautiful hilly region along the banks of rivers, dwelling on the summit of hills during the rains and on the river banks during summer.³ They were timorous and shy by their nature, particularly afraid of the currents of water (udakabhītā). They were very playful, amusing and enchanting, fond of music and noted for their romantic conjugal love and fidelity.⁴ They were to be found in all the Himalayan ranges up to the Gandhamādana.⁵ To the hunters they were known as Kimpurisas.⁶ They possessed excellent health and their span of life was one hundred years.⁷

The Yavanas who are assigned in the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa to the north-western extremity of India are known as Yonas in Pali⁸ and Yaunas in the Great Epic.⁹ The Yonas are grouped, precisely as in Aśoka's Rock Edicts,¹⁰

^{1,2} Jātaka, iv, pp. 283, 286.

³ Ibid., iv, p. 283: Candapabbatavāsino Kinnarā vassāratta-samaye anoteritvā pabbate yeva vasanti, nidāghe oṭaranti.

⁴ Ibid., iv, p. 439.

⁵ Ibid., iv, p. 438f.: Mallangiriṃ Paṇḍarakam Tikūṭam sītodiya anuvicarāma najjo; Apadāna, i, p. 265f.: Candasbhāgānādītire ahoṣiṃ kinnaro tadā | pupphabhakko . . . pupphānaṃ vasano||

⁶ Ibid., iv, p. 439: jānanti no Kimpurisa ce luddā.

⁷ Ibid., iv, p. 441.

⁸ Majjhima, ii, p. 149.

⁹ Mahābhārata, xii, 207.43.

¹⁰ R.E., V and XIII.

with the Kambojas and Gandhāras. As for the Yonas, they were originally the people who came from Ionia. But the Macedonian and Bactrian Greeks, too, have been represented by the same name in all branches of Indian literature. The Yonas mentioned in the canonical Pali texts together with the Kambojas and Gandhāras may be presumed to have settled down subsequently in the extreme north-western part of India retaining their old customs and manners and maintaining their old religious beliefs. That they tried to maintain their separate entity as a people in these two respects is well attested by the evidence of all literary and epigraphical documents.¹

In the Epics² as well as in some of the later Buddhist texts,³ the Yavanas are associated with the Śakas. In the Rāmāyaṇa (iv, 43.11-12), as pointed out by Dr. Raychaudhuri, the Yavanas are placed between the country of the Kurus and the Mādras, and the Himalayas.⁴ The Bactrian king Milinda is said to have been born in a village in the island of Alasanda (Alexandria) with which the memory of the Yonas as Macedonian Greeks remained associated.⁵ The

¹ Majjhīma, ii, p. 149.

² Rāmāyaṇa, iv, 43.11-12; Mahābhārata, i, 54.21.

³ E.g., the Mahāvibhāṣā-śāstra.

⁴ Political History, 4th ed., p. 3.

⁵ Kalasigāma is the name of the locality mentioned in the Milindapañha, p. 83.

Yonas or Yonakas as Bactrian Greeks founded principalities in this very region of India establishing their suzerainty even over Mathurā¹ in the south-east and over Surāṣṭra² and Besnagar (Vessanagara near Vedisa).³ When the Śakas (Scythians) invaded Uttarāpatha and established themselves there, the Yonas or Bactrians and other Greeks appear to have made political and matrimonial alliances with them.

The Yonas as the Ionian Greek settlers figure in Asokan records, precisely as in the Pali Suttas, as semi-independent or independent tribes. But the Yonas as the Bactrian Greeks were all along ruled by the monarchs of their own. They adhered, in their official documents at least, not only to their national language (Yavana-bhāsā) but also to their national alphabet (Yavana-lipī).

The Mahābhārata (xii, 207.43) introduces the Kāmbojas (Pali Kambojas) along with the Yaunas, Gandhāras, Kirātas and Barbaras as peoples of Uttarāpatha (Uttarāpathajanmānaḥ). The constant association of them with the Gandhāras and Yaunas in the Great Epic, the Pali texts and the early Indian inscriptions may be taken to suggest that they settled down and founded their territory somewhere near Gandhāra. According to the Mahābhārata (vii, 4.5), they had undoubtedly their capital at Rājapura,¹ a place which Hiuen Tsang locates to the south or south-east of Punach.² Dr. Raychaudhuri points out that the western boundaries of their territory must have reached Kafirstan in which district the three distinct tribes, namely, Caumojee, Camoze and Camoje remind us of the Kambojas.³ Their country stood evidently on a trade-route connecting it with Dvārakā.⁴ It was the habitat of good horses (assānaṃ āyatanam).⁵ As described in the Pali Assalāyana Sutta, the Yonas and Kambojas had the same kind of social organisation.⁶ The Kambojas were considered barbarous.⁷ They had an independent or semi-independent tribal form of government.

¹ Cf. Hāthigumphā Inscription of Khāravela: Madhuraṇ apayāto Yaṇana-rājā.

² Cf. Junagadh Rock Inscription of Rudradāman I.

³ Cf. Besnagar Garuḍa-pillar Inscription of Heliodoros.

The Jaina canonical texts mention the Cirātas (Pali and Sk. Kirātas) as a people without any details about them. In one of the Nāgārjuni-konḍa inscriptions, the Cirātas are associated

¹ Rājapuram gatvā Kāmbojā nirjitā-stvayā.

² Watters, op. cit., i, 284.

³ Raychaudhuri, op. cit., 4th ed., p. 126; JRAS., 1912, p. 255.

⁴ Petavatīhu, p. 23.

⁵ Sumaṅgalavilāsinī, i, p. 124.

⁶ Majjhima, ii, p. 149.

⁷ Jātaka, vi, pp. 208, 210.

with the Cīnas.¹ The Apadāna speaks of the Cīnas and Babbaras, the former being described as a people who came to Hamsavatī on the Ganges from a distant land (ārā va Cīnaraṭṭhā ca āgacchanti).² The Barbaras and Kirātas are placed in the Great Epic in the Uttarāpatha along with the Yaunas, Kāmbojas and Gāndhāras.³ The Kirātas find mention in the Pali commentaries as 'a tribe of jungle men'. Their dialect is 'classed with those of the Oṭṭas (Oḍḍas), the Andhakas, the Yonakas and the Daṃiḷas'. These are all recorded as languages of the Milakkhas⁴ (Milakkhānaṃ bhāsā) that were thirteen in number⁵ according to the Jambudīva-pañṇatti. From Pali and Sanskrit sources it may be concluded that the Kirātas had their settlements not only in the north-east and north-west extremities of Northern India but also in other parts of India.

The Gandhāras after whom the land where they settled down was named were one of the ancient peoples of India—the Gandhāris mentioned in the Vedas.⁶ In the Purāṇas they are described as descendants of the Druhyas, who were, according to the Vedic tradition, a north-

¹ E I., vol. xx, Pt. I.

² Apadāna, ii, pp. 358-359.

³ Mahābhārata, xii, 207.43.

⁴ Sumaṅgalavilāsinī, i, p. 176.

⁵ Eighteen, according to the Sammohavinodanī, p. 388.

⁶ R̥gveda, 7, 123.7; Atharvaveda, v, 22.14.

western people. In the Jātakas and the Epic, Gandhāra is described as a kingdom with Takkasilā (Sk. Takṣasīlā) as its capital and Puṣkalāvati or Puṣkarāvati or Utpalāvati as one among its other chief towns. The Kumbhakāra Jātaka preserves the tradition of Naggaji (Sk. Nagnajit), a famous ancient king of Gandhāra, who was a contemporary of Nimi, king of Videha, Dummukha, king of Pañchāla,¹ and Bhīma, king of Vidabbha,² and Karaṇḍu or Karakaṇḍu, king of Kālīṅga. In a few other instances the rulers of Gandhāra are introduced simply as Gandhārarājā.³ Situated at a vulnerable point of attacks from the south-east, south-west and north-west, Gandhāra passed hands several times, retaining its independence from time to time. It was conquered once by king Janamejaya of Kuru, while in the latter half of the 6th century B.C., it became included in the empire of Darius, the Achaemenid king of Iran.⁴ We are told by Buddhaghōsa that king Pukkusāti was reigning in Gandhāra as a contemporary of king Bimbisāra of Magadha, and that there was a friendly relation between them.⁵ At the time of Alexander's

¹ Cf. Uttarādhyayana Sūtra, xviii, p. 45; Jātaka, iii, p. 377.

² Aśtaśya Br., vii, 34.

³ Jātaka, i, p. 191; ii, p. 219; iii, p. 364; iv, p. 98.

⁴ See Behistun inscription of Darius.

⁵ Papañcasūdanī (Sinhalese ed.), ii, 982.

invasion of India in B.C. 327, the kingdom was ruled over by Taxiles (Tākṣaśilā) who was succeeded by his son Mophis or Omphis (Sk. Āmbhi). As the *Divyāvadāna*¹ and Aśoka's Rock Edicts (V and XIII) attest, Gandhāra was included in the Maurya empire, the Gandhāras as a people enjoying some degree of independence along with their neighbours, the Yonas and Kambojas. According to the Mahāniddesa (vol. i, p. 154), Takkaśilā was one of the great centres of trade, while the R̥gveda bears testimony to the good wool of the sheep of the Gandhāris. The local script of the Gandhāras was Kharoṣṭhī which was in use in that part of Eastern Turkistan where the people of Gandhāra founded a colony.

The Maddas (Sk. Madras) as a people founded their territory in the central Punjab with Sāgala or Śākala (modern Sialkot) as their capital. Sāgala was the capital of king Milinda (Menander) when he ruled over the kingdom of Madda. The Maddas find mention not only in the Jātakas and Epics but also in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa. This Vedic text (viii, 14.3) speaks of the Uttarakuravas and Uttaramadras as two peoples who had established a special kind of sovereignty called vairājya and lived in countries beyond the Himavanta. The existence of an

¹ Divyāvadāna, p. 61.

Uttaramadda side by side with that of Uttarakuru is proved also by the Pali commentaries that tell us that the queen of a king overlord is a princess either from Uttarakuru or from the royal house of Madda.¹ Thus we are led to think that, like the Kurus, the Maddas were originally a trans-Himalayan people. As in their original home, so when they migrated to India, they settled down in the Punjab as neighbours of the Kurus. Even their Indian territory which is strictly speaking the southern Madda was equally noted for the beauty of their women (Maddaraṭṭham nāma itthāgāro).² We have mention in the Jātakas and in the Epics of matrimonial alliances between the royal house of Madda on one side and those of Sivi, Kuru, Kāśī, Kośala and Kalinga³ on the other, in each instance, the princess belonging to the former. The Maddas lived under a monarchical form of government and their capital Sāgala was an emporium of trade and one of the most flourishing cities.⁴

The Kekayas, Kekakas or Kekas find mention in the Jātakas as one of the ancient peoples of

¹ Papañcasūdanī, ii, p. 950; Sumaṅgalavilāsinī, ii, p. 628; Paramatthajotikā, I, p. 173.

² Theragāthā-aṭṭhakathā, ii, p. 142; Therīgāthā-aṭṭhakathā, p. 68.

³ Law, Geography, p. 54. According to the Mahābhārata, the mother of Janamejaya, king of Kuru, and according to the Ramāyāṇa, one of the three queens of king Daśaratha of Kośala, were princesses from the Royal House of Madra.

⁴ Mūlindapañha, pp. 1-2.

India who evidently founded two territories, one in Uttarāpatha and the other in Mahimśa-karaṭṭha. In the Purāṇas they are mentioned as one of the three septs of the family of Anu, son of Yayāti, the other two being represented by the Uśīnaras and the Madras.¹ According to the Rāmāyaṇa, the Kekayas of Uttarāpatha settled down in a territory between the Vīpāśā (Beas) and the kingdom of Gandharva or Gandhāra.² Their capital was Rājagṛha or Girivraja which is identified by Cunningham with Girjāk or Jalalpur on the Jhelum. The name of their capital is not met with in the Vedic texts. According to the Jātaka tradition, the kingdom and capital of the Kekayas were named Kekaka after them, their capital ranking among the three principal cities in Jambudīpa, the other two being Uttarapañcāla and Indapatta.³ The Sarabhaṅga and Saṅkioca Jātakas preserve the tradition of Ajjuna, a very powerful but wicked king of the Kekayas in the Mahimśa-karaṭṭha.⁴ It is probable that the Kekaya kings mentioned in some of the Amarāvati and Nāgārjunikoṇḍa inscriptions were descendants of the Kekayas who founded a kingdom

¹ Matsya, 48.10-20, Vāyu, 99.12-23; Raychaudhuri, op. cit., 4th ed., p. 53.

² Rāmāyaṇa, II, 67.7, II, 68.22.

³ Jātaka, II, p. 213.

⁴ Ibid. v. 20n. 145. 273.

in the Deccan. The Rāmāyaṇa speaks of a matrimonial alliance between the royal houses of Kośala and Kekaya in Uttarāpatha. We learn from Jain sources that one half of the Kekaya kingdom was Aryan and the Kekaya city was known as Seyaviyā.¹

The Sivi is mentioned in the Jātakas as another ancient people of India who settled down in Uttarāpatha. There is a discrepancy between Sivi and Vessantara Jātakas, as regards the name of the capital of their kingdom, the former calling it Aritṭhapura² and the latter Jetuttara.³ The fact seems to be that the two Jātakas speak of two different kingdoms, one with its capital at Aritṭhapura and the other with Jetuttara as its chief town. The second territory is placed to the south of the Cetaratṭha at a distance of thirty yojanas. Just to the north of the city of Jetuttara stood a mountain called Suvannagiritāla. Between this mountain in the south and the mountain, Arañjaragiri, in the north, flowed a river by the name of Kontimārā. The way from Jetuttara to the Vaṅka mountain in the Himavanta lay through the Cetaratṭha across the river Kontimārā.⁴ The Nimi Jātaka mentions a king named Usinara

¹ Indian Antiquary, 1891, p. 375.

² Jātaka, iv, 401; v, 210; vi, 419.

³ Ibid., vi, p. 480.

⁴ Ibid., vi, p. 514.

and his son Śivi without giving any hint as to their connection with the Sivi people or kingdom.¹ The connection is made clear in the Mahābhārata (iii, 130.131) which definitely speaks of a Sivi kingdom ruled by king Uśīnara, 'which lay not far from the Yamunā'.² Patañjali in his comment on Pāṇini's rule (iv, 2.2), mentions a locality in the north-western India by the name of Śivapura which is apparently the same place as Śivipura mentioned in a Shorkot inscription.³ Thus we may agree with Dr. Vogel in thinking that the Shorkot region was once the site of a city of the Śivis. The people of this part of Uttarāpatha were known to the Greek historians as Siboi, equipped with 40,000 foot-soldiers at the time of Alexander's invasion, dressing themselves with the skins of wild beasts and having clubs for their weapons.⁴

The Khuddakas (Greek Sudracæ or Oxy-drakai, Sk. Kṣudrakā), Suddakas (Greek Sodrai), Rohanas and Sindhavas are four other tribes or peoples of Uttarāpatha who find mention in the Apadāna (ii, p. 359). Of them, the first founded a territory between the Hydraotes (Ravi) and Hyphasis (Bias), and

¹ Jātaka, vi, p. 95f.

² Raychaudhuri, op. cit., 4th ed., p. 205.

³ E.I., 1921, p. 16.

⁴ Raychaudhuri, op. cit., 4th ed., p. 204.

figured as 'one of the most numerous and warlike of all the Indian tribes in the Punjab' at the time of Alexander's invasion. The second is invariably associated in the Great Epic (vii, 19.6; ix, 37.1) with the Ābhīras who lived near the Sarasvatī. Apart from their association with the Sindhavas in the Apadāna, nothing further is as yet known of the Rohanas as a tribe or people. They were probably the Indian people in Uttarāpatha who formed a settlement in Ceylon 'comprising the south-eastern part of the island', though, according to the chronicles of Ceylon, the kingdom of Rohaṇa was founded by a Sakyan prince.¹ The Sindhavas, as their name implies, were a tribe or people who settled down in a valley of the Indus and founded a territory which has been known as Sindhu or Sind. This territory is constantly associated in the early Pali texts with that of the Sauvīras between the Indus and the Jhelum.

The Kurus are described by Buddhaghosa as a people who had migrated in large numbers from Uttarakuru to Jambudvīpa and founded a kingdom which was named Kuru after them.² The Kuru kingdom which was 300 leagues in extent comprised several districts, towns and villages, and its capital, Indapatta (Sk. Indra-prastha near the modern Delhi) was seven leagues in circuit. Hastināpura (Pali Hatthipura),¹ known, in earlier times as Āsandivat, appears to have been the earlier capital. On this point Dr. Raychaudhuri observes: 'The evidence of the Vedic texts and that of the Purāṇas can be reconciled if we assume that, after the death of Janamejaya, the Kuru kingdom was split up into several parts. One part, which had its capital at Hastināpura, was ruled by the direct descendants of Janamejaya himself. Another part was ruled by the descendants of his brother Kakṣasena. The junior branch probably resided at Indraprastha or Indapatta . . . which probably continued to be the seat of kings claiming to belong to the Yudhiṣṭhila-gotta (Yudhiṣṭhira-gotra), long after the destruction of Hastināpura, and the removal of the elder line of Kuru kings to Kausāmbī'.² It is, however, difficult to reconcile such an assumption as this with the Jātaka tradition, according to which, Ajjuna or Dhanañjaya Koravya of the stock of Yudhiṣṭhila, with Vidhurapaṇḍita as his wise counsellor, reigned in the Kuru country when its capital was at Indapatta.³ On the other hand, the Kuṇāla Jātaka preserves a tradition of the five Pāṇḍava brothers (Paṇḍurājaputtā), Ajjuna,

¹ Mahāvamsa, ix, 10.

² Papañcasūdanī, i, 184

¹ Apadāna, ii, p. 359.

² Raychaudhuri, op. cit., 4th ed., pp. 37-38.

³ Jātaka, v, p. 57f.; vi, p. 255.

Nakula, Bhimasena, Yudhiṭṭhila and Sahadeva, all of whom were chosen as husbands at the same time by Kāṇhā (Sk. Kṛṣṇā, another name for Draupadī according to the Great Epic), the only daughter and only child of the king of Kāśī. It speaks of them without reference to any kingdom and applies the epithet of rājā only to Sahadeva. The Jātakas have nothing to say with regard to the war of the Pāṇḍavas with the Kauravas. They tell us nothing also about the matrimonial alliance of the Pāṇḍavas with the Andhaka-Vṛṣṇis or Yādavas. Evidently the Kuru king Ajjuna of the family of Yudhiṭṭhila had nothing to do with Ajjuna and Yudhiṭṭhila among the five Pāṇḍava brothers. In the Mahāvamsa (vii, 50, 69, 72), by the term Paṇḍurājā is meant the king of Pāṇḍya in South India with Madhurā (modern Madoura) as its capital. The Jātakas are silent as to the connection of Paṇḍurājā, the ancestor of the Pāṇḍavas, with any kingdom in Northern or Southern India having Madhurā for its capital. They are eloquent in praise of king Ajjuna during whose reign the Kuru country was an ideal kingdom, ruled most righteously and noted for virtue.¹ His family chaplain was a Brahmin of pure conduct by the name of Sucīrata and he alone seems to have deserved the epithet of Koravya.¹

¹ Cf. Kurudhamma Jātaka (No. 276), Dhūmakāri (413), Sambhava 515), Vidhuraṇḍita (545).

It seems that the next king in the line of Ajuna was Sutasoma who is introduced as the son of king Koravya of the Kuru realm and who became so very fond of eating human flesh that he was compelled at last to abdicate his throne and walk out of his realm.²

When the Kuru country included in it Uttarapañcāla, a king by the name of Reṇu reigned in the city of Uttarapañcāla, and Prince Somanassa was his son.³

There was a time when Kuru, Pañcāla and Kekaya were 'three of the most powerful kingdoms' in Jambudvīpa.⁴ But in the Buddha's time the Kuru country was being ruled only by a titular chieftain called Koravya, and evidently had very little political importance of its own.⁵ The people of Kuru continued nevertheless to enjoy their ancient reputation for deep wisdom and sound health.⁶

The Pañcālas founded a kingdom contiguous to that of the Kurus. The Pañcāla country was divided by the Ganges into two parts, Uttara and Dakkhina, each forming a kingdom

¹ Jātaka, iv, p. 361.

² Ibid., v, p. 457f.

³ Ibid., iv, p. 444f.

⁴ Ibid., ii, p. 214.

⁵ Majjhima, ii, p. 65f.

⁶ Papañcasūdanī, i, p. 184f.

by itself. Like the Jātakas, the Divyāvadāna and the Mahābhārata speak of the two divisions of their realm. According to the Kumbhakāra Jātaka, when king Dummukha, a contemporary of king Naggaji of Gandhāra, reigned in Uttara-pañcāla, its capital was Kampilla (Sk. Kāmpilya),¹ while according to the Divyāvadāna (p. 435), at one time its capital was Hastināpura, the well-known chief city of the Kurus. The Mahābhārata, on the other hand, definitely mentions Kāmpilya as the capital of Dakṣiṇa-pañcāla, and Ahicchatrā or Chatravatī as that of the Uttara. According to the Great Epic, the division of the Pañcāla kingdom into Northern and Southern was effected in fulfilment of a treaty between the king of Pañcāla and that of Kuru, after the former had been snatched away by the latter. The fact, however, seems to be that the two peoples were on a state of war with each other from time to time, at one time the Pañcālas annexing a portion of the Kuru country to their realm, and at another, the Kurus establishing their supremacy over the northern division of Pañcāla.² At all events, the Somanassa Jātaka definitely states that once upon a time Uttarapañcāla was included in the Kuru realm.³

¹ Jātaka, III, 379.

² Law, Geography, p. 18f.

³ Jātaka, IV, p. 444.

In the Jātakas we have mention of three other kings of Pañcāla, namely, one whose son was the valiant prince Jayaddisa;¹ secondly, Brahmadatta who oppressed his subjects with taxes and tyranny;² and thirdly, Cūḷaṇi Brahmadatta who partly succeeded in subduing the then king of Videha by a well-plotted stratagem.³ King Cūḷaṇi Brahmadatta finds mention in the Rāmāyaṇa (i, 32), the Jaina Uttarādhyāyana Sūtra (xiii, 1) and the Svapnavāsavadattā (Act V). Even in the Buddha's time Pañcāla was being ruled by a king of its own, although like the Kuru realm, it lost its political importance. If it be correct to think that the Pañcālas were originally the same people as the Krivis who find mention in the Vedic texts, we can say that they settled at first on the Sindhu and the Asikni (Chenāb) and that their country was divided as Western and Eastern instead of Northern and Southern.⁴

In the Anguttara Nikāya, as noted before, the country of Maccha (Sk. Matsya) is included, together with its people, in the traditional list of sixteen mahājanapadas. In this and other Pali lists the Macchas as a people are usually associated with the Sūraseṇas, while in the Vidhurapaṇḍita Jātaka they are said to have witnessed the contest at a game of dice between

¹ Jātaka, v, p. 21f.

² Ibid., v, p. 98f.

³ Ibid., vi, p. 94.

⁴ Vedic Index, i, p. 469.

the Kuru king Dhananījaya or Ajuna and Puṇṇaka the Yakkha. This may lead one to think that the Macchas had formed an alliance with their neighbours, the Kurus and the Sūrasenas. According to the Mahābhārata, the Matsya country was then ruled by king Virāṭa who was an ally of the Kurus. Its capital Virāṭanagara was evidently named after king Virāṭa of the Epic fame. The Macchas as a people had no political importance in the Buddha's time.

Over and above the usual association of the Sūrasenas (Sk. Śūrasenas, Greek Sourasenoi) in the Pali canonical lists of the mahājanapadas, the Vidhurapaṇḍita Jātaka speaks of an occasion when the Sūrasenas were present in the Kuru court in the city of Indapatta along with the Macchas, Maddas and Pañcālas. If any historical inference is to be drawn from these combinations, it would be that they were all neighbours and that their realms stood close to one another. Their capital, Madhurā (Sk. Mathurā) on the right bank of the Yamunā stood midway between Indapatta and Kosambī on the same river. Strictly speaking, it is the Uttaramadhurā which is identified with Maholi, five miles to the south-west of the present town of Mathurā or Muttra.¹ From Saṃkissa (Sk.

Samkāsya) on the Ganges the distance of Northern Madhurā is said to have been four yojanas only.¹ According to the Ghata Jātaka, once upon a time king Mahāsāgara reigned in Uttaramadhurā.² He had two sons, Sāgara and Upasāgara of whom the former succeeded his father to the throne and the latter became the uparājā or viceroy. Mahāsāgara's contemporary was king Mahākamsa of Kamsabhoga³ in Uttarāpatha with his capital at Asitañjana, a place which has not as yet been identified. Mahākamsa was succeeded to the throne by his elder son, Kamsa, whose younger brother Upakamsa became his viceroy. There was a matrimonial alliance between the royal houses of Uttaramadhurā and Kamsabhoga, Prince Upasāgara marrying Kamsa brothers' sister Devagabbhā (Sk. Devakī) who became the mother of Vāsudeva, his nine brothers and one sister. Among the contemporaries of Sāgara and Kamsa, the Ghata Jātaka mentions the name of Kālasena who was at that time reigning in the city of Ayojjhā (Sk. Ayodhyā), which was undoubtedly the earlier capital of Kośala. The village of Govāḍḍhana (Sk. Govardhana) in the kingdom of Kāṃsa was offered to Upasāgara as a wedding present. In the Buddha's time the ruler of the Sūrasenas, as his name implies, was a prince born of a princess married by the king of Sūrasena from the royal house of Avantī.¹ When Megasthenes wrote about the Sūrasenas, their country must have been included in the Maurya empire, and after the Mauryas, their capital Madhurā came under the sway of the Bactrian Greeks and the Kuṣāṇas. Whether their country formed a Śuṅga dominion or not is still a disputed point. The memory of the Sūrasenas as a people remains associated with a distinct form of Prākṛit dialects named Śaurasenī after them or their country.

¹ Kaccāyana's Pali Grammar, edited by S. C. Vidyābhūṣaṇa, Book III, Ch. I, p. 157.

² Jātaka, iv, p. 81.

³ It is difficult to agree with Malalasekera in thinking that Kamsabhoga or Kamsabhoja was probably the same country as Kamboja.

The Ghata Jātaka seems to present a distorted version of the legend of Vāsudeva and his brothers, described as Andhakaveṇḥudāsaputtā dasabhātikā, the ten brothers who passed as the sons of Andhakaviṣṇu, husband of Nandagopā, their foster-mother. In it Vāsudeva is otherwise called Kaṇha (Sk. Kṛṣṇa) and Kesava (Sk. Keśava), which is quite compatible with the account given in the Great Epic and the Purāṇas. It records the names of Vāsudeva's nine brothers as Baladeva, Candadeva, Suriyadeva, Aggideva, Varuṇadeva, Ajjuna, Pajjuna (Sk. Pradyumna), Ghatapaṇḍita and Ankura. The first child of their mother Devagabbhā (Devakī) was a daughter named Añjanādevī. Devagabbhā is represented as the sister of king Kāṃsa whom the Jātaka connects with Kāṃsabhoga instead of Madhurā. The ten brothers who grew up as powerful wrestlers and valiant warriors became ambitious to establish their paramount sovereignty over the whole of Jambudvīpa. The first kingdom they seized was that of Uttaramadhurā. Next they directed their attention to Kāṃsabhoga. After making themselves masters of Kāṃsabhoga, and gradually defeating and killing the kings of sixty-three thousand realms, they began to reign in the city of Dyāvavati or Dvārakā which stood on the sea and had a hill by its side. They divided their empire into ten dominions that were allotted to the ten brothers, the youngest brother parting with his share in favour of their sister Añjanādevī. The sons of the ten brothers perished by the curse of the sage Kaṇhadīpāyaṇa whom they had insulted and killed, and they themselves met with a tragic end, the account of which is in substance the same as that given in the Maṇṣalaparva of the Great Epic. But according to the Mahāummagga Jātaka, Vāsudeva's son, Sivi, by a Caṇḍāla woman, named Jambāvati, continued to reign in Dvāravati.¹

¹ Majjhima, ii, p. 83f.

¹ Jātaka, vi, p. 421.

The Pali Andhakaveṇhu, offered as the personal name of Vāsudeva brothers' foster-father, is only a wrong Prakrit form of the Sk. Andhaka-Vṛṣṇis who represented two out of the four branches of the Sātvatas, the other two being the Daivāvṛdhas and the Mahābhojas. The Sātvatas themselves were one of the septs of the Yādavas. According to the Mahābhārata and the Purāṇas, the ruling family of Mathurā belonged to the race of Yadu. Kṛṣṇa-Vāsudeva and his brothers were Andhaka-Vṛṣṇis or Yādavas. The connection of Kṛṣṇa with the land of the Sūrasenas is confirmed also by the Greek writers who mention Methora (Mathurā) and Cleisobora (Kṛṣṇapura) as two of their important cities. Dr. Raychaudhuri rightly observes: 'The Andhakas and Vṛṣṇis are referred to in the Aṣṭādhyāyī of Pāṇini (iv, 1.114; vi, 2.34). In Kauṭilya's Arthaśāstra the Vṛṣṇis are described as a Saṅgha, i.e., a republican corporation. The Mahābhārata, too, refers to 'the Vṛṣṇis, Andhakas and other associate tribes as a Saṅgha (xii, 81.25) and Vāsudeva as a Saṅgha-mukhya.'¹

The early Jaina and Buddhist texts have very little to say regarding the Avantīs as a people. According to the Mahāgovinda Suttanta, when the empire of Reṇu, probably a powerful

¹ Raychaudhuri, op. cit., 4th ed., p. 118

Videhan king, was divided into seven sub-kingdoms, the kingdom of Avantī fell to the share of Vessabhū, counted as one of the seven contemporary kings of the line of Bharata.¹ Māhissatī (Sk. Māhiṣmatī) was then the capital of this kingdom. But the Pali canonical texts mention Ujjenī (Sk. Ujjayinī) as the capital of Candapajjota, the king of Avantī in the time of Mahāvīra and the Buddha. Professor D. R. Bhandarkar seeks to account for this discrepancy by the assumption that the country of the Avantīs was divided into two kingdoms, one placed in the Dakkhināpatha having Māhissatī for its capital, and the other, i.e., the northern kingdom having its capital at Ujjenī.² This explanation has not so far been disputed.

As for the Avantīs as a people, the Matsya Purāṇa counts them among the five branches of the Haihayas, the other four being represented by the Vītihotras, Bhojas, Kuṇḍikeras or Tuṇḍikeras and Tālajaṅghas.³ According to the Matsya ⁴ and Vāyu ⁵ Purāṇas, the first dynasty of Māhiṣmatī ⁶ was of the Haihaya family. The Haihayas, mentioned also in the Arthaśāstra, established themselves in that part of India by

¹ Dīgha, ii, p. 236.

² Garmichael Lectures, 1918, p. 54.

³ Matsya, 43.48-9.

⁴ Ibid., 43.8-29.

⁵ Vāyu, 94.5-26.

⁶ JRAS., 1916, p. 867—Pargiter's note deserves consideration overthrowing the Nāgas of the Narmadā region. The Haihayas and their descendants, the Avantīs, Bhojas, and the rest, were all originally of the Sātvata race.¹

The pedigree of king Caṇḍapajjota of Avantī is nowhere given in Pali or Ardhamāgadhī. According to the Purāṇas, however, his father was Pulika who killed his master, the then reigning king of Avantī and anointed his son, Pradyota by force. Pradyota who subdued all neighbouring kings was 'destitute of good' policy.' He reigned for 23 years and was succeeded by five kings who reigned for 138 years.² His son and successor was Pālaka whose reign served as data for fixing the date of Mahāvīra's demise. Thus in the time of Mahāvīra and the Buddha, Caṇḍapajjota or Pajjota was the powerful monarch of Avantī who had three sons and a daughter named Vāsuladattā (Sk. Vāsavadattā). Vāsuladattā eloped with king Udena of the Vaccha realm. Within a century and a half from the death of Pajjota, the country of the Avantīs became merged in the Maurya empire.

The Jātakas speak of sixteen Bhojaputtas.³ But they tell us nothing as to the countries where the sixteen branches of the Bhojas resided or founded their territories. The Bhojas were, even according to the Aitareya and Śatapatha Brāhmaṇas, one of the septs of the Sātvatas. Bhīma, the king of Vidabbha (modern Berar), was no doubt a Bhoja king. The Sarabhaṅga Jātaka¹ preserves the tradition of the powerful king Daṇḍakī of the kingdom of Daṇḍaka in the Vindhya region, who had his capital at the city of Kumbhavatī. The sovereignty of Daṇḍaka was established over the whole of the Vindhya region, extending as it did from Vidabbha to Kāliṅga. Kāliṅga, the king of Kāliṅga, Atthaka, the king of Atthaka and Bhīmaratha, presumably the king of Vidabbha, acknowledged his supremacy. The kingdom of Daṇḍakī was utterly destroyed by a natural catastrophe. Daṇḍakī or Dāṇḍakya was undoubtedly a Bhoja king.² In the fifth and thirteenth Rock Edicts of Aśoka, the Raṭhikas, Bhojakas and Pitinikas, all of whom may be supposed to have belonged to the Sātvata race, are mentioned as semi-independent ruling peoples of Aparānta. In the Hāthigumphā Inscription of Khāravela the Raṭhikas and Bhojakas are introduced in such a manner as to leave no room for doubt that they were ruling chiefs of the Vidyādhara settlements (Vijādharaḍhivāsā).

¹ Raychaudhuri, op. cit., 4th ed., p. 23.

² Pargiter, Dynasties of the Kālī Age, pp. 18, 88.

³ Saṃyutta, i, 61-62; Jātaka, i, p. 45; Law, Geography, p. 62.

¹ Jātaka, v, pp. 134, 267ff., Majjhīma, i, p. 378; Mahāvastu, iii, p. 363f.

² Arthaśāstra, Chamaśāstri's Tr., p. 12.

The Jambudīva-paññatti, as noted before, connects the Vidyādhara with the Vaitāḍhya or Vindhya range and speaks of their eighteen settlements. When the Jātakas speak of sixteen Bhojaputtas, one may understand that they were the ruling chiefs of sixteen Vidyādhara tracts along the Vindhyas. From these references, both in literature and in inscriptions, it may be inferred that the Vidyādhara were not mythical beings but some aboriginal tribes that settled along the Vindhyas.

The Assakas (Sk. Aśvakas, Aśmakas) find mention as a distinct people of India in early Pali texts, in Pāṇini's grammar, and in the Mahābhārata, Bṛhatsaṃhitā, and Purāṇas. The Greek writers knew them as Assakenus whose territory was situated in the Swat Valley. In the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, they are placed in Uttarāpatha. Pāṇini's reference, too, must have been to a people in Uttarāpatha.¹ But the early Pali texts are concerned only with those Assakas who founded a territory in the Dakkhināpatha which lay contiguous to the kingdom of the Avantis² and on the south bank of the Godāvarī.³ The capital of this southern kingdom was Potana⁴ (Sk. Paudanya) or Potali.⁵

¹ Law, Geography, p. 21.

² Jātaka, v, p. 317.

³ Sutta-nipāta, verse 977.

⁴ Dīgha, ii, p. 235.

⁵ Jātaka, ii, p. 155.

It was included at one time, in the past, in the empire of Renu and was ruled by Brahmadatta¹ who must have been a prince of the royal family of Kāśī. At another time, as stated in the Assaka Jātaka, the Assaka kingdom formed an integral part of the empire of Kāśī.² In this instance, the Jātaka does not give us the personal name of the king. The Cullakālīṅga Jātaka mentions Aruṇa, the king of Assaka, who accepted the challenge of the contemporary powerful king of Kālīṅga and ultimately defeated him. The battle ended in a treaty which was solemnised by a matrimonial alliance between the two royal houses.³ The Godāvarī flowed between the two neighbouring kingdoms of Assaka and Mūḷaka or Alaka,⁴ the latter lying to the north of the former and at the foot of the Vindhya. In the commentary on the Sutta-nipāṭa, the two kingdoms are represented as two Andhaka or Andhra principalities. According to the Vimānavatthu-Commentary, the ruler of Assaka at the time of the Buddha was a king whose son was Prince Sujāta.⁵

Among the dwellers of the Vindhya region other than the Bhojas and Avantis including

¹ Dīgha, i, p. 235.

² Jātaka, ii, p. 155.

³ Jātaka, iii, pp. 3-5.

⁴ Sutta-nipāṭa, verse 977.

⁵ Vimānavatthu-aṭṭhakathā, p. 259f.

the Anuvindakas, the Apadāna (ii, p. 359) mentions the Bhagga-Kārūsas, Okkalas and Mekalas. The Dasannas find mention in the *Jātakas*¹ and Petavatthu. They were evidently a people who settled along the banks of the river named Dasannā (modern Dasan, a tributary of the Yamunā), and founded a territory with their capital at Vedisa (modern Bhilsa) on the river Vetravatī. Erakaccha was a well-known city of the Dasannas.² The Dasanna country is counted among the sixteen mahājanapadas in the Mahābhārata (ii, 5.10) and Mahāvastu (i, p. 34). The name of the Mekalas is to be met with only in a nominal list. The Okkalas were evidently the inhabitants of Ukkala (Sk. Utkala) which lay, according to the Mahāvastu (iii, p. 303), in Uttarāpatha. It is not impossible that the Okkalas who belonged at first to the north-western region of India, founded a colony afterwards in the Vindhya region. That there was an Ukkala janapada in Uttarāpatha is borne out by the Theragāthā-Commentary, according to which, the two caravan-merchants, Tapassu and Bhalluka, referred in the Mahāvastu to Utkala in Uttarāpatha, were citizens of Pokkharavatī,³ a well-known city in Gandhāra.

¹ Jātaka, iii, p. 338.

² Petavatthu, ii, 7.

³ Theragāthā-aṭṭhakathā, i, p. 48f.

Thus it is very probable that Utkala in Uttarāpatha, with Pokkharavatī as its chief town, formed a part of the kingdom of Gandhāra. So far as the Apadāna reference is concerned, the association of the Okkalas with the Mekalas hardly leaves room for doubt that they belonged to Ukkala, which, together with Oḍḍa, constituted Orissa proper. The Apadāna list contains also the name of the Oḍḍakas whose dialect, as already noted, was counted among the instances of Milakkhabhāsā. Certain classes of thinkers, namely, the ahetuvādā, akiriyavādā and natthikavādā, are banned as Ukkalāvassabhaññā, i.e., persons speaking the 'unintelligible jargon of the country of the Okkalas'.¹ The Bhaggas, associated in the Apadāna with the Kārūṣas whom the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa allocates to the Vindhya region, were a people who founded a territory contiguous to that of the Vamsas or Vacchas. Their capital was Sumsumāragira. In the Buddha's time their country became a dependency of the kingdom of Vaccha and was being governed by Prince Bodhi, son of king Udena, who built a magnificent palace called Kokanada at Sumsumāragira.² A branch of the Bhaggas, as already pointed out, also occupied a small territory between Vesālī and Sāvattthī.

¹ Aṅguttara, ii, p. 31; Majjhima, iii, p. 78. Buddhaghosa wrongly explains the expression as signifying two persons, Vassa and Bhaññā, who were natives of Ukkala.

² Aṅguttara, ii, p. 61; Majjhima, i, p. 332.

Among the peoples of the Aparānta or western sea-board other than the Sindhu-Sovīras, we have mention in the Apadāna (ii, p. 359) of the Surattḥas, Aparāntakas and Suppārikas (or Suppāarakas). The Jaina canonical texts mention the name of Kacchas, who settled down in a territory, now known as Cutch. The Bharukacchas (Sk. Bhṛgukacchas) were the citizens of Bharukaccha (modern Broach in Kathiawar).² The kingdom of Bharu stood on the sea and was three hundred leagues in extent. The tradition is that the whole of this kingdom was submerged in the sea by the fury of the gods.¹ According to the Divyāvadāna (p. 576) the kingdom of Bhīru with its principal city Bhīruka or Bhīrukaccha was founded by and named after Bhīru, who was one of the two chief ministers of king Rudrāyaṇa of Sauvīra in the lower Indus Valley. Rudrāyaṇa, a contemporary of king Bimbisāra of Magadha, was killed by his wicked son Śikhāṇḍī, whose kingdom was afterwards destroyed as a punishment for this crime. The legend concerning the foundation of the Bhīru kingdom with its capital in the Buddha's time cannot be believed, for the simple reason that the kingdom and its sea-port had existed long before. The Sussondi Jātaka speaks of the minstrel Sagga's journey from Benares to *Bharukaccha*¹ (Barygaza of Ptolemy and the Periplus.)

¹ Jātaka, ii, p. 169f.

The Suppārikas or Suppārakas (Sk. Saurpārakas) were the citizens of Suppāra or Suppāraka (modern Sopārā) which was the capital of the kingdom of Sunāparanta.² The distance of Suppāra from Sāvattthī was one hundred and twenty leagues.³ The people of Sunāparanta 'were reported as being fierce and violent'.⁴

The Suratṭhas were the inhabitants of the kingdom of Suratṭha (Sk. Surāṣṭra) which is identified with Kathiawar. The prosperity of Suratṭha was due to trade.⁵ One king Piṅgala ruled in Suratṭha as a subordinate potentate under the Mauryas,⁶ while, according to the Junāgaḍ inscription of Rudradāman I, the Yavana Tuṣāspa was the governor of Surāṣṭra under king Aśoka.

Among the peoples of South India referred to in the Great Epic and Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa,

¹ Jātaka, iii, p. 187f.

² Majjhima, iii, p. 268; Saṃyutta, iv, p. 61f; N. L. Dey, Geographical Dictionary of Ancient and Medieval India, p. 197.

³ Dhammapada-aṭṭhakathā, ii, p. 213.

⁴ Majjhima, iii, p. 268; Saṃyutta, iv, p. 61.

⁵ Apadāna, ii, p. 359; Milinda, pp. 331, 359; Jātaka, iii, p. 463, v, p. 133. *

⁶ Peṭavatthu, iv, 3. According to the Commentary, the contemporary Maurya king was Dhammāsoka, which is, however doubtful. See C. D. Chatterjee's paper, 'A historical character in the reign of Aśoka Maurya', D. R. Bhandarkar Volume, p. 329f.

the Andhakā (Sk. Andhrā), Sabarā, Damīlā (Drāviḍā) and Kolakā (Coḷā) find mention in the Apadāna (ii, pp. 358-59). The Mahimsakā and Kalingā are mentioned in the Jātakas. Uttaramadhurā mentioned in the Jātakas presupposes knowledge of Dakkhinamadhurā, which must have been the capital of the Pāṇḍyas of South India. The Pāṇḍyas as an independent people find mention in the edicts of Aśoka along with the Coḷas, Satiyaputras and Keralaputras. These four peoples must have been comprehended by the name, Damīlā, in the Apadāna. The Āndhrakas, Pulindas and Śavaras are counted in the Mahābhārata (xii, 207.42) among the people of the Deccan. In the edicts of Aśoka too, the Āndhras are associated with the Pārindas who were apparently no other people than the Pulindas in the Great Epic and the Purāṇas.

Vincent A. Smith considers the Andhakas (Āndhrakas) as 'a Dravidian people, now represented by the large population speaking the Telugu language, who occupied the deltas of the Godāvarī and the Kṛṣṇā'. But in the Pali commentaries, exactly as in the Apadāna, the Andhakas as a people are distinguished from the Damīlas, although their dialects are classed under the group of eighteen Milakkhabhāsā or non-Aryan languages. Srinivas Iyengar thinks that they were originally a Vindhyan tribe, whose territories extended from west to east down the valleys of the Godāvarī and the Kṛṣṇā.¹ According to the Sutta-nipāta commentary, Assaka and Mūlaka became two Andhaka principalities. In the Kathāvatthu commentary, Buddhaghosa definitely mentions that Pubbasela, Aparasela, Rājagiri and Siddhattha were all localities in the Andhaka territory. The Serivāṇija Jātaka locates Andhapura, the capital of the Andhakas, on the river Telavāha, identified by Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar with the modern Tel or Telingiri.² The Āndhras and Pārindas were two among the semi-independent ruling tribes within Aśoka's empire.

The Sabaras (Sk. Śavaras) were evidently an aboriginal tribe identified usually with the Suari of Pliny and the Sabaræ of Ptolemy. They are probably represented now by the Savaralu or Sauras of the Vizagapatam Hills and the Savaris of Gwalior.³

The Akitti Jātaka speaks of the Daṃḍaraṭṭha as a territory round Kāvīrapaṭṭana,⁴ the port of Kāverī which is definitely placed by Buddhadatta in the kingdom of Coḷa (Coḷaraṭṭhe).⁵

¹ Indian Antiquary, 1913, p. 276f.

² Ibid., 1918, p. 71.

³ Raychaudhuri, op. cit., 4th ed., p. 79.

⁴ Jātaka, iv, p. 238.

⁵ Buddhadatta's Manuals, Introduction, xiii, foll.

King Aśoka frankly admits that the Coḷas maintained their independence during his reign. Their territory in Dakkhiṇāpatha¹ certainly lay to the south of Aśoka's empire including the Andhra and Mahimsaka or Kekaya territories.

The Pāṇḍyas were a ruling people of South India, whose territory lay to the south of the river Kāverī. Their later capital, Madhurā, is described by Buddhaghosa as a suttapaṭṭana or a port noted for the export of cotton fabrics. During Aśoka's reign they were one of the independent nations in the south. As described in the Hāthigumphā inscription of Khāravela, the contemporary Pāṇḍya king was rich in the possession of gems, pearls and jewels.

The Keralaputras, Keralas or Cheras were a branch of the Daṃiḷas who occupied a territory along the western sea-coast of the Deccan. In Aśoka's time they, too, were the independent nations of South India.

The Kāṇḍiās were a powerful people of India who founded a territory between the territories of the Lāḍhas and the Andhakas, and along the eastern sea-coast. Their country represented one of the seven sub-kingdoms in the empire of Reṇu, ruled by king Sattabhū with his capital at Dantapura (Pālura), near Chicacole. The Hāthigumphā inscription speaks of the three dynasties of kings who reigned in Kāliṅga, the third being a Ceti or Cedi royal family to which Khāravela himself belonged. One of the ancient kings of the Kāliṅgas was a contemporary and rival of Aruṇa, the king of Assaka, who being defeated in battle, concluded a treaty by which he gave all his four daughters in marriage to the victor.¹ Another king was a vassal under king Daṇḍakī.² A third king, Karaṇḍu or Karakaṇḍu, was a contemporary of Naggaji of Gandhāra.³ In the Kāliṅga-bodhi Jātaka we read that the Kāliṅga king of Dantapura had two sons, Mahākāliṅga and Cullakāliṅga, the elder brother succeeding his father and the younger brother marrying a Mādda princess from Sāgala while in exile. Cullakāliṅga's son, who was destined to be a Cakkavatti, was installed on the throne of Kāliṅga after the death of Mahākāliṅga.⁴ The Jātakas maintain also a tradition of a Kāliṅga king, named Nālikīra, who brought about destruction of his kingdom by ill-treating a hermit.⁵

¹ Petavatthu commentary, p. 133.

The Kāliṅga country was conquered by Aśoka and it was annexed to his kingdom. The people of Kāliṅga were so powerful at that

¹ Jātaka, iii, p. 3f.

² Ibid., v, p. 136f.

³ Ibid., iii, p. 376f.

⁴ Ibid., ix, p. 232f.

⁵ Ibid., v, p. 144.

time that they could well afford to lose in battle about three hundred thousand soldiers.

In the Great Epic and Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, the Āṅgeyas (Pali Āṅgā), Māgadhas, Vaṅgeyas (Vaṅgā), Sauhmas, Tāmraliptakas, Bhārgavas, Vaidehas and Mallas are counted among the peoples of Eastern India. The early Buddhist and Jaina texts speak also of the Vajjis, Licchavis, Nātas, Sumbhas and Lāḍhas (Rāḍhas).

Of them, the Lāḍhas lived in a pathless country with its two divisions, known as Subbhābhūmi and Vajjabhūmi. It may be rightly supposed that these two divisions of Lāḍha corresponded to Suhma and Tāmralipti respectively. The Jaina Ācārāṅga Sūtra speaks of the inhabitants of the Rāḍha country as rude and generally hostile to the ascetics.¹ When the ascetics appeared near their villages, they used to set dogs upon them, uttering the syllables, 'cu cu'.

The Āṅgas, Vaṅgas and Magadhas as countries and peoples figure prominently in the Jaina list of sixteen mahājanapadas, while in the Pali list the Vaṅgas have no place at all. So far as the evidence of the Pali canon and Milindapañha goes, Vaṅga stood apart from Āṅga. Vaṅga finds mention indeed, in the

¹ Ācārāṅga Sūtra, I. 8.3.

·*Mahāniddeśa*¹ and *Milindapañha*² as a centre of trade reached by sea. According to the Pali chronicles, however, both the country and capital of the Vaṅgas were known as Vaṅga. The then king of the Vaṅgas had married a princess from the royal family of Kalinga.³

It is in the Atharvaveda (v, 22.14) that we have the earliest mention of the Aṅgas and Magadhas as two peoples. From the Vrātya book of the same Veda (xv), it is evident that they were despised as *Vrātyas*⁴ or peoples who lived outside the pale of orthodox Brahmanism. Aṅga with its capital at Campā formed one of the seven sub-kingdoms within the empire of R̥ṣu, and it was allotted to a king named Dhatarat̥ṭha of the line of Bharata. Magadha, however, has no place in this list. According to the Harivaṃśa and Purāṇas, Dadhivāhana was the son and successor of Aṅga. This Dadhivāhana could not have been the same king Dadhivāhana of Aṅga who is represented by the Jainas as a contemporary of Mahāvīra and a weak rival of king Śatānika of Kausāmbī.⁵ According to the Pali tradition, however, the king of Aṅga in the Buddha's time was Brahma-

✓ ¹ Niddeśa, vol. i, p. 154.

✓ ² Milinda, p. 359.

✓ ³ Dīpavaṃśa, ix, 2.

✓ ⁴ For a learned note on the subject, vide A. B. Keith's paper in IAS., 1913, p. 155f.

✓ ⁵ JASB., 1914, p. 320f.

datta who was defeated and killed by Prince Seniya Bimbisāra, son of king Bhāṭṭiya of Magadha, who ruled Campā as his father's viceroy. Aṅga continued to be a dependency of Magadha till the reign of Khāravela of Kalinga. The Dipavamsa (p. 28) tells us that Campā was ruled by Aśoka's son, Mahinda, his sons and grandsons. In the earlier phase of the war, Brahmadatta is said to have defeated Bimbisāra's father, Bhāṭṭiya. Even before that the kings of Aṅga were at war with those of Magadha, the victory being sometimes on this side and sometimes on the other. The Vidhura-paṇḍita Jātaka refers to Rājagaha as a city of Aṅga.¹

Among the peoples of Eastern India, the Magadhas or Māgadhas were destined to rise steadily into an imperial power. As a Khattiya tribe, they founded a territory round Mt. Vepulla, which was bounded on the north and west by the Ganges, on the east by Campā, and on the south by the Vindhya, the Sone forming the western boundary of the Magadhakhetta. The Gayākhetta formed an integral part of the Magadha kingdom throughout its existence. The Mahābhārata (i, 63.30) honours king Brhad-ratha as the founder of Girivraja, also named Bārhadrathapura after him, while the Rāmāyaṇa

¹ Jātaka, vi, p. 271.

(i, 32.7) gives the credit for it rather to his father, the Cedi king Vasu Uparicara. In the Cetiya Jātaka, the five sons of the Ceti king Upacara or Apacara are mentioned as founders of the cities of Hatthipura (in the Kuru realm), Assapura (in the kingdom of Aṅga), Sihapura (in the Panjab), Uttarapañcāla (in Pañcāla), and Daddarapura, the Giribbaja being excluded from the list.¹ But the Purāṇas persistently describe the Bārhadhrathas as the royal dynasty that continued to rule the Magadha kingdom almost up to the 6th century B.C.

Seniya Bimbisāra was king of Aṅga-Magadha when the Buddha renounced the world and Mahāvira became a Jina. He was junior to the Buddha in age by five years. According to the Buddhist tradition, Bimbisāra's father and immediate predecessor was king Bhatiya or Bhaṭṭiya, whose connection with the Bārhadhrathas is nowhere mentioned or indicated. King Caṇḍapajjota of Avantī, Udena of Vamśa, Pasenadi of Kośala, Rudrāyaṇa of Sauvira and Pukkusāti of Gandhāra are known to have been his great contemporaries. Similarly Pulika of Avantī, Parantapa of Vamśa, Mahāpasenadi of Kosala and Brahmadattā of Aṅga may be described as contemporaries of Bimbisāra's father as also of himself. In the Great Epic, ¹ Jātaka, iii, pp. 454, 460-461.

Jarāsandha, the most powerful king of Magadha, is introduced as the son and successor of Br̥hadratha. His powerful ally was the Cedi king Śiśupāla, both of whom were defeated and killed by the Pāṇḍava brothers. Nothing of this historical legend can be traced in the early Jain or Buddhist texts. On the other hand, in the Jaina Uttarādhyayana Sūtra (xviii, 43), we have mention of Jaya, son and successor of king Samuddavijaya of Rājagaha, as the eleventh Cakkavattī of the Bhāratavarṣa. Arindama, Duyyodhana, and a few other ancient kings of Magadha are mentioned by name in the Jātakas. During the period preceding the advent of Mahāvira and the Buddha, the notable event in the history of Magadha was the prolonged contest for supremacy between the Magadhan monarchs and the kings of Aṅga with varying results. It ultimately ended, however, in permanent annexation of Aṅga to Magadha.

The Videhās, who represented in the Buddha's time as one of the important clans constituting the Vajjian or Licchavi confederacy, were a people who originally migrated from the eastern continent of Videha and founded a territory named Videha after them on the left bank of the Ganges. According to the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (I. IV, 1 etc.), the country of Videha owes its name to its first king, Videgha Māthava, who came from the Sarasvatī region. This king Māthava would seem to be no other than Makhādeva or Maghādeva in Pali. The father and predecessor of Nemi or Nimi as noted before, was a contemporary of Naggaji of Gandhāra, Dummukha of Pañcāla and others. It was from Nimi that the long line of the Janakas proceeded. The son and immediate successor of Nimi was Kalārajanaka,¹ so called because of his projecting teeth, whose son and successor was Samañkara. Thus Makhādeva is rightly described as the forerunner of the powerful kings of Mithilā. According to the Rāmāyaṇa (1.71.3), the ādi-puruṣa of the royal family of Mithilā was Nimi (Jaina Nami), whose son was Mithi and grandson, Janaka I. Jānaka's son, Janaka II, father of Sītā, had a brother named Kuśadhvaṇṇa who became the king of Sāmkāśya. In the Vāyu (88.7-8) and Viṣṇu (iv, 5.1) Purāṇas, however, Nimi or Nemi figures as a son of Īkshvāku and is honoured with the epithet of Videha. The Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad speaks of the philosopher king Janaka of Mithilā whom Rhys Davids was inclined to identify with king Mahājanaka of the Mahājanaka Jātaka.² The Videha country was bounded on the east by the Kauśikī, on the south by the Ganges, on the west by the river Sadānirā and on the north by the Himālayas. It was, according to the Gandhāra Jātaka,¹ 300 leagues in extent and contained at one time 16,000 villages, 16,000 storehouses and 16,000 dancing girls. Its capital Mithilā was built by Govinda.² The great prosperity of the Videhas was due to trade with other countries, Benares and the rest. According to the Jaina canonical tradition, Ceṭaka³ of Videha was an influential leader of the Licchavi confederacy. His sister, Trisālā, was the mother of Mahāvira, the historical founder of Jainism, and his daughter, Cellanā or Vedeḥī, was married to Śreṇika Bimbisāra of Magadha and became mother of Kūṇika, i.e., Ajātasattu.

¹ Maṅghama, ii, 82; Jātaka, vi, 129.

² Jātaka, vi.

When we speak of the Vajjis (Sk. Vṛjīs), we speak either of the Vajjian confederacy or the Vajjis as one of the constituent clans of that confederacy. The confederacy is also associated with the name of the Licchavis forming another constituent clan. The confederate clans were eight in number (aṭṭhakulā or aṭṭhakulakā) which, according to the Jaina *Kalpa*⁴ and Nirayāvalī Sūtras, consisted of nine Licchavi clans. They formed an alliance with the nine Mallakas and the kings of Kāśī and Kosala.

¹ Jātaka, iii, p. 365.

² Digha, ii, p. 235.

³ Ācārāṅga Sūtra, pp. xii-xvi—maternal uncle of Mahāvira.

⁴ Sec. 128.

This alliance existed not only at the time of Mahāvīra's demise but also when a war ensued between Kūṇika Ajātasattu and the Licchavis.

As for the remaining confederate clans, one may mention the name of Nāyas, Nātas or Jñātrikas,¹ who lived in a suburb of Vesālī, the Vajjian capital, and the Bhaggas who settled between Vesālī and Sāvattthī. Thus it may be supposed that the eight or nine confederate clans with the exception of the Videhas resided near about Vesālī which was at the time one of the most flourishing and beautiful cities in northern India.² According to the Ekappaṇṇa Jātaka, the city of Vesālī was surrounded by a triple wall, each wall standing at the distance of a league from the next and was provided with three gates and watch-towers.³ The Vṛjis or Licchavis possessed a bright complexion; they were luxurious and at the same time most warlike, and strong in their national unity.⁴ There was an oligarchical republic and they had a common Mote-hall in which all important questions of administration were decided.⁵ So long as they were able to maintain their unity, no power could conquer their country.

¹ See B. C. Law, Some Kṣatriya Tribes of Ancient India, Ch. II.

² Vinaya Texts, S.B.E., II, 171; Lalitavistara, Ch. III, p. 21.

³ Jātaka, I, p. 504.

⁴ B. C. Law, Some Kṣatriya Tribes of Ancient India, Licchavis.

⁵ Ibid., Chapter on Licchavis, Sec. V.

But we shall see anon that their unity was destroyed and that their country was conquered by the kings of Magadha not long after the demise of the Buddha. According to their national custom, a most handsome girl was reserved for the pleasure of the people.¹ Each family had its distinctive dress of its own.² The Vajjis or the Licchavis claimed their descent from the royal family of Kāsī.

The Mallas and the Licchavis are counted in the *Manusamhitā*³ among the Vrātya Kṣatriyas. Like the Licchavis, the Mallas or Mallakis, consisting of nine clans according to the Jain canonical texts, formed a strong confederacy, republican in its character.⁴ They too had a Mote-hall, for the discussion of all important matters concerning them. In the Mahāparinibbāna Suttanta,⁵ they are called Vāseṭṭhas, i.e., the Khattiyas belonging to the Vāseṭṭha (Vasiṣṭha) gotra. Like the Videhas, the Mallas had originally a monarchical form of government, Okkāka (Ikshvāku) being mentioned in the Kusa Jātaka (No. 531) as a Malla king. It is probable that like the Śākyaas, the Mallas as Kṣatriyas claimed their descent from

¹ B. C. Law, Historical Gleanings, p. 71.

² Watters, On Yuan Chwang, ii, p. 79.

³ X. 22.

⁴ B. C. Law, Some Kṣatriya Tribes of Ancient India, Ch. IV.

⁵ Dīgha, ii, pp. 158-159.

the royal family of Okkāka. The Mallas and the Licchavis as two neighbouring peoples established friendly relations between them at least for their self-defence, though the Bhaddasāla Jātaka (No. 465) offers us an account of a conflict between them. At the time of the rise of Buddhism the Mallas were divided into two main sections, one having their capital at Pāvā and the other at Kusīnārā. There was current among the Mallas a living tradition of the former glory of Kusīnārā, which was built on the site of the ancient city of Kuśāvati, which was the capital of the king Mahāsudassana.¹ There was a great belt of a Himalayan forest called Mahāvana which covered some portions of the Vajji and Malla territories. The Mallas retained their independence till the demise of the Buddha, as we find that both the main sections of the Mallas² appeared among claimants for shares of the bodily remains of the Master. It is not yet possible to collect the names of all the nine branches of the Mallas mentioned in the Jaina Kalpasūtra.

The Śākya who, too, formed a confederacy with the Koliyas, have a permanent place in the history of India and of the world on account of the birth of the Buddha Gotama among them. They founded a kingdom named after them in that part of northern India which stood between the kingdom of Kosala in the west and the Malla territory in the south-east. Their capital, Kapilavatthu, was founded around or near the hermitage of the sage Kapila. The Śākya claimed their descent from king Okkāka whose ancestry is traced back to king Mahā-sammata. In the early Pali texts, they are described as Ādiccabandhu in the sense that they belonged to the solar race of the Khattiyas. They had their Mote-hall at Kapilavatthu where their administrative and judicial business was carried out.¹ They as a ruling people were proud of the purity of their birth, for which, as tradition goes, they had to pay a heavy penalty. In the Buddha's time, the position of the Śākya was that of vassals (anujātā) under king Pasenadi of Kosala. Placed as they were, they could not cherish much of territorial ambition. They once came into conflict with the Koliyas over the waters of the Rohiṇī river which had separated their territories.² According to the Jātakas and the Pali commentaries, the Śākya territory was invaded and conquered by Viḍūḍabha, the usurper king of Kosala in the last year of the Buddha's career. But in the Mahā-parinibbāna Suttanta,³ we read that both the

¹ Dīgha, II, p. 170f.

² Ibid., II, p. 167.

¹ Buddhist India, p. 19. Cf. ZDMG., 44, 344 (Jolly).

² Jātaka, v, 412.

³ Dīgha, ii, 167.

Śākya and the Koliyas as independent political powers appeared among the rival claimants for shares of the Buddha's bodily remains. Among other claimants, we have mention of the Bulis of Allakappa, the Moriyas of Pipphalivana and the Kālāmas of Kesaputta. We know practically nothing about the Bulis and the Kālāmas save and except that they were two of the small ruling clans. As for the Moriyas of Pipphalivana, according to the Mahāvamsa commentary,¹ two are the possible derivations of their name, one from the word modiya meaning delightful and the other from the word mora meaning peacock. According to the first derivation, the Moriyas were so called because they lived in a delightful land, and according to the second, they were called Moriyas because they founded their city in a locality which always resounded with the cries of peacocks. The Mahāvamsa commentary (pp. 119-121) traces the origin of the Maurya dynasty of Magadha to the Moriyas of Pipphalivana. Candagutta, according to this tradition, was born of the queen-consort of the Moriyān king of Pipphalivana. This is evidently in conflict with the account in the Mudrārākṣasa.

Turning at last to the peoples placed in the Brahmanical Mid-land, we have to take into account the four important peoples, e.g., the Kāsīs, the Kosalas, the Vamsas and the Cedis. The Kāsīs were one of the most ancient peoples of Northern India, who find mention in the Atharva-veda,¹ in which they are associated with the Kosalas and Videhas. They founded a kingdom named Kāśī after them, which was 300 leagues in extent, with its capital at Bārāṇasī which was known by other names in the past ages.² The city of Benares which stood on the left bank of the Ganges was encompassed by the walls that were twelve leagues in circuit. In the Mahāgovinda Suttanta Kāśī with Bārāṇasī as its capital is included in the list of seven sub-kingdoms within the empire of Reṇu. The administration of the kingdom of Kāśī fell to the share of Dhataratṭha represented as a king of the line of Bharata. The Bharata line of the Kāśī kings appears to have been supplanted by a new line of Brahmadattas who were probably of the Videhan origin.³ Most of the Jātaka stories have been narrated with reference to the reigns of the Brahmadattas of Kāśī. The Mahābhārata speaks of a dynasty consisting of as many as 100 Brahmadattas (ii, 8.23). That Brahmadatta was more a family designation than a personal name of the reigning king is evident from at least two Jātakas namely the Dummedha¹ and Gaṅga-māla.² The Videhan origin is borne out by the evidence of such Jātakas as the Mātiposaka and Sambula, especially the latter in which a son of Brahmadata, king of Kāśī, is expressly called Vedehaputta. The history of the Kāśīs, their kings and country is long as well as eventful. Many Jātakas testify to the unsurpassed glory of the city of Benares and to the ambition of its rulers for paramount sovereignty over the whole of Jambudīpa.³ The Vinaya Mahāvagga (x, 2.3), too, bears testimony to the former greatness and prosperity of the city. The kingdom of Kāśī became important in the history of the Jains on account of the fact that their Tīrthaṅkara Pārśva was a prince of Benares. There was a time when king Manojā of Benares was able to subdue the kings of Kosala, Aṅga and Magadha.⁴ At another time, the kingdom of Assaka became a dependency of Kāśī.⁵ During the period preceding the rise of Jainism and Buddhism, the most important event in the history of the Kāśīs is the repeated struggle for supremacy between the kings of Kāśī and

¹ Mahāvamsa-Tīkā (Sinhalese ed.), p. 119f.; Law, Some Kṣatriya Tribes of Ancient India, pp. 211-212.

¹ Vedic Index, ii, 116 f.n.

² Jātaka, iv, 15, 119-20.

³ Raychaudhuri, op. cit., p. 63.

¹ Jātaka, i, p. 259f.

² Ibid., No. 421.

³ Bhaddasāla Jātaka No. 465, Dhonassāka Jātaka No. 353.

⁴ Sonananda Jātaka No. 532.

⁵ Assaka Jātaka No. 207.

Kosala. Some of the Kāśī kings in the Jātakas, as pointed out by D. R. Bhandarkar¹, find mention also in the Purāṇas.²

The series of struggles ended finally in a permanent annexation of the kingdom of Kāśī to that of Kosala.³

The Kosalas⁴ as a people do not find mention in the Vedic texts. They were a Kṣatriya tribe who like the Śākya traced their descent from king Okkāka. The kinship between the two neighbouring peoples was so close in all respects that the Buddha openly confessed that he was as much a Kosalan (Kosalako) as the then king Pasenadi of Kosala.⁵ In the earlier days of Brahmadatta, king of Kāśī, the Kosala country was only 'a poor and tiny estate with slender resources' (daliddo appadhano appabhogo appabalo appavāhano appavijito aparipunṇa-kosakoṭṭhāgāro).⁶ It may be taken for granted that Ayodjhā (Ayodhyā) was the earlier capital of the undivided kingdom of Kosala. One king Kālasena reigned in

¹ Carmichael Lectures, 1918, p. 57.

² Vissasena of Jātaka No. 268 = Viśvasaksena; Udaya of Jātaka No. 458 = Udayasena, Bhallāṭiya of Jātaka No. 504 = Bhallāṭa.

³ Vinaya, S.B.E., vol., 294-99; Kuṇāla Jātaka No. 536; Kosambi Jātaka No. 428.

⁴ For fuller details, vide B. C. Law, Ancient Indian Tribes, Ch. II.

⁵ Dhammacetiya Sutta, Majjhima, II, p. 118f.

⁶ Vinaya, Mahāvagga, S.B.E., vol. xvii, 294.

Āyejjhā as a contemporary of Sāgara of Uttaramadhurā and Vāsudeva Kaṇha of Dvāravatī. The capital of the Kosalas in the Buddha's time was Sāvattthī on the right bank of the Aciravatī. King Daśaratha whom the Rāmāyaṇa represents as the king of Kosala with his capital at Ayodhyā is described in the Dasaratha Jātaka as the king of Kāśī. The second capital of the Kosalas was Sāketa as may be inferred from the Nandīyamiga Jātaka.¹ But Vaṅka and many others are said to have reigned in Kosala when Sāvattthī became its capital. This was indeed the third and last capital of the Kosalas. At the time of the rise of Buddhism, Pasenadi, son and successor of Mahāpasenadi, was king of Kosala. Kāśī became subordinate to Kosala already during the reign of Pasenadi's father. Kāśī was at that time being governed by Pasenadi's brother who was evidently his viceroy. The throne of Kosala was being usurped by prince Virūdhaka, a son of Pasenadi. Pasenadi is known to have been not only a contemporary of the Buddha but also a person who was born on the same date and died in the same year (tvam pi asītiko aham pi asītiko).²

The Vamsas or Vacchas³ were a people who founded their territory along the right bank of the Yamunā with their capital at Kosambī. The Purāṇas trace their origin to the royal family of Kāśī. In the epic tradition, a Ceti prince named Kuśāmba is described as the founder of the city of Kosambī. The king of the Vamsas in the Buddha's time was Udena (Udayana) who is described as the son and successor of king Parantapa.¹ In the Purāṇas, Udayana is connected with a long line of Kuru kings headed by Nioakṣu who, on the destruction of Hastināpura by flood, transferred his residence to Kauśāmbī. Udena excelled others in the wealth of his elephants and sought to strengthen his position by entering into matrimonial alliances with the neighbouring kings. Even during the reign of Udena, the Bhagga country remained a dependency of the Vamsas.

— ¹ No. 385.

² Dharmacetiya Sutta, Majjhima, ii.

³ For fuller details, see B. O. Law, Ancient Mid-Indian Kṣatriya Tribes, Vol. I, Ch. VI.

The Cetis or Cedis², also known as Cetaputtā, were one of the most ancient peoples of India whose territory lay midway between the kingdoms of the Kurus and the Vamsas. In the Cetiya Jātaka we are given a genealogy of the Ceti kings from the first king Mahāsammata. The tenth king Upacara or Apacara is generally identified with the Puru king Vasu-uparicara mentioned in the Mahābhārata. The agreement between the two legends lies in the fact that in both the five sons of Uparicara are said to have been founders of the five different lines of kings. Even in historical times, as already pointed out, the third dynasty of the kings of Kalinga including Khāravēla is expressly mentioned to have originated from the Cedis.

¹ According to the Purāṇas, his father's name was Vasudāna and according to Bhāṣa, Sahasrāṅka.

² For fuller details, vide B. G. Law, Ancient Mid-Indian Kṣatriya Tribes, Vol. I, Ch. V.

The early texts of Jainism and Buddhism present, on the whole, a picture, envisaged by Rhys Davids¹ for the first time, of the political history of India in which the four great monarchies of Magadha, Kosala, Vamsa and Avantī, appeared as powerful competitors for overlordship. The remaining powers were of minor importance. They only remained as passive spectators or subordinate allies. The two of the most important oligarchical powers were the confederacies of the Vajjis or Licchavis of Vesālī and of the Mallas of Kusinārā and Pāvā. The Śākyas and Koliyas were only vassals under the monarch of Kosala. The Bulis of Allakappa, the Moriyas of Pippalivana, the Kālāmas of Kesaputta and the Bhaggas of Sumsumāragira remained as vassals under Kosala and Vamsa respectively. The four kingdoms of Kāśī, Ālavī, Kuru and Pañcāla acknowledged the supremacy of Kosala which became very powerful by the conquest of the kingdom of Kāśī. The kingdom of Avantī under Caṇḍapajjota became so powerful that all the neighbouring states admitted its supremacy in Western India. The kingdom of Magadha under Bimbisāra extended its supremacy over the whole of Kajaṅgala along with the kingdom of Aṅga. In the Mahāparinibbāna Suttanta, king Ajātasattu of Magadhā is represented as saying to himself 'I will uproot the Vajjīs'. An explanation of this grim determination is given by Buddhaghosa. We are told that Ajātasattu and the Licchavis shared between them a big port on the Ganges. At a certain distance from it, there was a mineral mine the produce of which was to be equally divided, as per agreement between the parties. But the terms of the agreement were violated by the Licchavis. Ajātasattu, fully conscious of the strength of the Licchavis as gaṇarājās, did not venture to enforce the terms of the agreement upon them. According to the Jaina Nirayāvalī Sūtra, Ajātasattu presented his two uterine brothers, Halla and Vehalla, with a noble elephant and a costly necklace. After ascending the throne, he demanded back both the presents. Reluctant to return them, his brothers fled away from Magadha and sought the protection of their maternal grandfather, Ceṭaka, the Licchavi-nāyaka of Vesālī. Ajātasattu having failed to get the things back by peaceful means, declared war against the Licchavis under Ceṭaka. A fierce battle ensued ending in the victory of the latter. The fact, however, seems to be that when Ajātasattu aspired after the throne of his father, the Licchavis set up a rival claimant. Anyhow the utterance of King Ajātasattu is significant as indicating that previously he was baffled in his attempts to subdue and punish the Licchavis. He sent his minister, Vassakāra, to the Buddha who laid much stress upon unity as the real source of their strength. Ajātasattu employed his ministers, Sunīdha and Vassakāra, to fortify the village of Pāṭaligāma on the Ganges to repel the attacks of the Vajjis and to bring about their disunion in order to weaken them.

¹ Buddhist India, Chaps. 1 and 2: This subject has been further discussed and elaborated by D. R. Bhandarkar in his Carmichael Lectures, 1918, by Raychaudhuri in his Political History of Ancient India, by Vincent A. Smith in his Early History of India, and by various writers in the Cambridge History, Vol. I.

Shortly after the death of Bimbisāra, Pasenadi stopped the payment of the revenue of the village of Kāsī which was offered by his father to his sister, as he was not in favour of allowing Ajātasattu, a parricide, to enjoy the income. This resulted in a war between Magadha and Kosala with the result that Ajātasattu was ultimately defeated and taken prisoner. A treaty was then concluded by the marriage of Pasenadi's daughter, Vajirā with Ajātasattu. Pasenadi did not live long after this. Taking advantage of his absence from the capital, Digha-Kārāyana (cārāyana), the commander-in-chief, placed Viḍūḍabha, a son of Pasenadi, on the throne. The last interview of Pasenadi with the Buddha, as recorded in the Dhammacetiya Sutta,¹ took place when both of them were in their eightieth year.

In the Introduction to the Bhaddasāla Jātaka², we read that Viḍūḍabha marched against the Śākya on detection of the fraud committed by them by giving his father a slave woman to marry instead of a Śākya girl. He massacred the Śākya brutally during the Buddha's life-time. But this story does not tally with the account in the Mahāparinibbāna Suttanta in which the Śākya of Kapilavatthu claimed and received a share of the Buddha's bodily remains.

By the machination of the Magadhan minister, Vassakāra, the unity of the Licchavis was completely destroyed and it became easy for Ajātasattu to conquer Vesālī. After the fall of the Vajjians, it may be supposed that their allies, the Mallas and the kings of Kāśī and Kosala with their vassals, came under the sway of Ajātasattu.

¹ Majjhima, ii, p. 118f.

² Jātaka, iv, p. 144f.

From the dynastic list of the kings in the Purāṇas, it appears that Prasenajit of Kośala, Udayana of Vatsa, and Pradyota of Avantī were succeeded each by four or five kings, after which their dynasties came to an end. But the early texts of Jainism and Buddhism have practically nothing to say about their successors after the Buddha's demise. The Pali canon and the Milindapañha record three events with reference to three chronological landmarks, e.g., the First Buddhist Council¹ held during the reign of Ajātasattu shortly after the Buddha's demise, the Second Council² held a century after that and the compilation of the Kathāvatthu during the reign of Dhammāsoka. Further, the Petavatthu mentions king Piṅgala of Surāṭṭha as a subordinate potentate in western India under the Moriyas. This is a clear indication of the fact that at that time the Magadha empire under the Moriyas included the three kingdoms of Kosala, Vamsa and Avantī.

The supremacy of Magadha which reached its zenith during the reign of Dhammāsoka, continued even in the midst of many vicissitudes through the reign of the Śuṅgas and their successors.

¹ Vinaya Piṭaka, Collavagga, Ch. 11.

² Ibid., Ch. 12.

CHAPTER III

SOCIAL LIFE AND ECONOMIC CONDITIONS

The peoples and kings dealt with in the preceding chapter ~~did not constitute the whole~~ of the populace of Jambubhūmi. From the point of view of social grades, ~~the~~ ^{who} were the Khattiyas¹—princes, warriors or nobles, who acquired the right to rule the country by the strength of their arms. The Indo-Aryan society was composed of three other social grades, namely, those represented by the Brāhmanas, Vessas and Suddas.² Those who accepted this social system based upon the four theoretical divisions of people, were broadly distinguished as Aryans from the rest of the populace looked down upon as Milakkhas or Milakkhus (= Mlecchas).³ In the outer fringes of the Indo-Aryan society, thus conceived and constituted, lived the Milakkhas among whom, again, some sections of people came completely under the sway of members of the Indo-Aryan society, and some maintained their political

¹ Jacobi, ZDMG., 48, 417—the Khattiya formula of the Buddhists

² B. C. Law, Concepts of Buddhism, Ch. III (jāti or caste).

³ Dīgha, iii, p. 264; Saṃyutta, v, p. 466; Jāṭaka, vi, p. 207
Sumaṅgalavilāsinī, i, p. 176; Paramatthapaṭiṭṭhi, II, p. 236.

independence, adhering to their own social system. Those forming the first category are broadly classed as five hīnajātis or 'low tribes' who followed hīnasigghas or 'low trades'. The Yonas and Kambojas of Uttarāpatha may be mentioned as two typical examples of those who belonged to the second category.

In contradistinction to the two upper grades of Khattiya, Brāhmaṇa, the Vinaya Sutta-~~abhaṅga~~ ^{abhaṅga} enumerates the five hīnajātis as the Candāla, Veṇa, Nisāda, Rathakāra (= Cammakāra) and Pukkusa. Of these 'low tribes', the Candālas are distinguished from the Pukkusas as corpse-throwers (chāvachaddhakā) from the methars and sweepers (pupphachaddhakā). The Veṇas are the workers in bamboo, the Rathakāras the workers in leather and the Nesādas the hunters (including the fowlers). In the opinion of Rhys Davids,² they were 'aboriginal tribesmen', the last three being hereditary craftsmen. In some of the enumerations,³ we have mention only of the first two just below the four recognised social grades of Khattiya, Brāhmaṇa, Vessa and Sudda, the implication being that the five despised classes were typified by them. From

¹ Anguttara, i, p. 107; ii, p. 85.

² Buddhist India, p. 54.

³ Anguttara, i, p. 162; iii, p. 214: Khattiya-Brāhmaṇa-Vessa-Sudda-Candāla-Pukkusa.

In every manner of enumeration, it is clear that they were to be linked up with any of the recognised grades, it was with the Suddas. At least, in Pāṇini's Sūtra (ii, 4.10—śūdrānām aniravasitānām), they are classed with the Suddas. Here Pāṇini distinguishes the Śūdras into two classes: (1) the aniravasita, meaning those who were not considered outside the pale of the Indo-Aryan society (abāhiskṛta-śūdrāḥ), and (2) the niravasita or those who were considered outside thereof. As explained in the commentaries, the latter class comprised those Śūdras who were untouchables or pariahs. The Candālas, Hartapas and the Haddipās or malegrahis are illustrations of this class.

As illustrations of the aniravasita Śūdras, Pāṇini's commentators mention cowherds (cattle-rearers), barbers, goldsmiths, potters, wood-carvers, blacksmiths, washermen, etc., Bhīllas and fishermen. When a compound is formed of names of the Śūdras inside the fold, it has a neuter singular form, e.g., gopa-nāpitam, karmāra-kumbhakāram; if names of the Śūdras outside the fold, it has a masculine dual or plural form, e.g., Candāla-haddipau.

In the Assalāyana Sutta, the Yajurvedic Kambojas are mentioned as being among the peoples whose social status was distinguished only between the two grades of ayya or master and dāsa or slave, there being an impassable barrier at all between the two classes.¹ The early texts of Jainism and Buddhism do not give us any insight into the social system of the Andhakas, Damilas and other milakkhas before they adopted the Indo-Aryan social scheme.

It will be seen that the social grades defined in the Indo-Aryan social scheme are all apparently based upon occupations. As such, they might be taken to denote senās (senās), or even trade-guilds (Pūgas), rather than castes or races. The Brahmanist conception of society as an organism with the mouth, the arms, the thighs and the feet as its four important functions, none superior, none inferior, the functioning of the entire organism depending upon the harmonious working of all the four parts. The mouth as symbol of culture and wisdom is represented by the Brāhmin; the arms as symbol of military strength by the Kshatriya; the administrative capacity by the Khattiya; the thighs as symbol of wealth and economic prosperity by the Vessa; and the feet as symbol of menial work by the Sudda,² the service being rendered by all the four in four different ways. In the Brahmanist, the society with its four grades was a natural order, and as such unalterable. The allegorical fancy led him to name the four divisions in terms of vaṇṇa, jāti or nikāya. In Pāli and other contemporary Indian texts these three terms occur as synonyms.¹ The organic conception of society and its allegorical expressions were attractive so long as these were kept within their reasonable bounds. The difficulties arose when the theory was sought to be put into practice and the allegories and metaphors were sought to be interpreted literally, e.g., the term vaṇṇa in the sense of distinctive colour or complexion, jāti in that of distinctive mode of birth, and nikāya in that of distinct species. The persistent Brahmanical tendency to give a hereditary character to occupational distinctions by birth-right led to the formation of castes and castes within castes. The early records of Jainas and Buddhists reveal a powerful movement of thought counteracting this rapidly increasing tendency.

¹ Majjhima, II, 227. dāso hoti, dāso hutvā ayyo hoti.

² Barua, A History of Indian Philosophy, p. 33.

As regards vaṇṇa, jāti or nikāya forming basis of social distinctions, each of them admitted a twofold interpretation: biological and psycho-ethical, biological and social or cultural. The vaṇṇa as a biological term meant colour or complexion and as a psycho-ethical term, a particular colouring or modification of soul or man's internal nature. The jāti as a biological term meant birth, pedigree or relationship, and as an ethical term, a particular mental or moral trait. Similarly the nikāya as a biological term meant a species, and as a social or cultural term, a distinct class, group or body. The claim of correspondence between the two meanings in all cases was absurd. There was no guarantee that one who was bright in complexion was in the same degree bright in internal nature; or that one who was of noble birth was also of noble disposition.

¹ Law, Concepts of Buddhism, p. 11.

Taking jāti and varṇa in their biological sense, Rhys Davids observed: 'The basis of social distinctions was relationship; or, as the Aryans, proud of their lighter colour, put it, colour. Their books constantly repeat a phrase as being common amongst the people—and it was certainly at least among the Aryan sections of people—which divided all the world, as they knew it, into four social grades, called colours (varṇā). At the head were the Kshatriyas, the nobles, who claimed descent from the leaders of the Aryan tribes. [They were most particular as to the purity of their descent through seven generations, both on the father's and the mother's side; and are described as 'fair in colour, fine in presence, stately to behold'.] Then came the Brahmins, claiming descent from the sacrificing priests, and though the majority of them followed other pursuits, they were equally with the nobles distinguished by high birth and clear complexion. Below these were the peasantry, the people, the Vaiśyas or Vessas. And last of all came the Śūdras, which included the bulk of the people of non-Aryan descent, who worked for hire, were engaged in handicraft or service, and were darker in colour.¹ In the Ambaṭṭha Sutta, kaṇhā (blackies) and bandhupādāpaccā (sprung from the feet of Brahmā) are freely applied to the Suddas as two terms of contempt. But the peoples of different complexions became so much intermingled in course of time that the brightness of colour in the natural sense of the term could rarely be relied upon as criterion of superiority of the social grade.

In order to prevent the loss of colour through intermixture and to preserve the national, racial, tribal or family type, it was deemed necessary to impose certain restrictions, rigid more or less, as to connubium or the right of inter-marriage and commensality or the right of eating together. Aiming at the production and preservation of the best possible type, not only from the physical and mental point of view but also from the family and cultural, the distinctions and restrictions were based also upon kula and gotta, the former meaning the collection of cognates and agnates and the latter, the cultural heritage from a highly endowed Ṛṣi. The term nikāya may be taken to have comprehended the sense of both kula and gotta.

In the Pāli texts, however, the term gotta has been employed in the sense of 'ancestry, lineage.' 'It includes all those descended, or supposed to be descended, from a common ancestor. A gotta name is always distinguished from the personal name, the name drawn from place of origin or residence, or from occupation, and lastly from the nickname. It probably means agnate rather than cognate.'¹ In support of this one may indeed cite the description given in the Sutta-nipāta of the Śākyaas as: Ādiccā nāma gottena, Sākiyā nāma jātiyā, 'known as Ādityas by their ancestry, and as Śākyaas by their birth'; and the introduction in the Jātakas of Dhanañjaya as 'a Kuru king of the Yudhiṣṭhila-gotta, 'of the stock of Yudhiṣṭhira'.² But when Vāsudeya, a Khat-tiya, is described as Kaṇha, i.e., 'one belonging to the Kaṇhāyana-gotta',³ the Buddha as Gotama, 'one belonging to the Gotama-gotta', and the Mallas as Vāseṭṭhas, 'those belonging to the Vāseṭṭha-gotta', it cannot be maintained that the term gotta stands for ancestral lineage in view of the fact that Kaṇha, Gotama, Vāseṭṭha and the rest are names of the ancient Ṛṣis who were mostly Brahmins and rarely Khatṭiyas by their birth. According to the Ambaṭṭha and Tevijja Suttas, the persons, such as Atṭhaka, Vāmaka, Vāmadeva, Vessāmitta, Yamataggi, Aṅgirasa, Bhāradvāja, Vāseṭṭha, Kassapa and Bhagu, from whom had originated the gottas, were all ancient sages who were composers and promulgators of the mantas or Vedic hymns. As Buddhaghosa suggests, the personal name was meant for recognition, and the gotta or surname for lineage (paññativasena, nāmaṃ pavenivasena gottam).¹ A history of the gradual division and sub-division of the original ten gotras into many pravaras and sākhās is given in the Divyāvadāna, Ch. xxxiii. Among the Sotthiya-class of Brahmins, many might have been led by sentiment to claim descent from those ancient sages. But the question will always remain open whether the claimed descent implied a line of agnates or a line of unbroken succession of teachers and disciples. In the case of gotta, too, there was a confusion between the ancestral lineage and the cultural.

¹ Pali-English Dictionary (P.T.S. ed), sub voce gottā.

² Jātaka, iii, p. 400.

³ Ibid., iv, p. 84.

¹ Sumaṅgalavilāsinī, i, p. 257.

Besides vanṇa, jāti, gotta, bhoga (wealth),¹ and kula, we have mention in the early Pāli texts of māna or prestige as determining a person's family or social status,² of which the testing was marriage factor of boys or girls.³

As for the four vanṇas forming the four broad divisions of the Indo-Aryan society, it should be noted at the outset that the usual order of enumeration, was: the Brāhmaṇas, the Kṣatriyas or Rājanyas, the Vaiśyas and the Śūdras. In the early Buddhist texts, on the other hand, the order of the first two vanṇas was reversed with the result that the Khattiya came to be placed first and the Brāhmaṇas just next to them. As regards the remaining two vanṇas, the order was left undisturbed. The Jainas and Buddhists contended for the precedence of the Khattiya over the Brāhmaṇas on the Brahmanist's own ground, i.e., the purity of birth through seven generations on the father's as well as the mother's side. The history of this superiority between these two classes is indeed as old as the remote Vedas. In some of the earlier Upaniṣads at the intellectual and spiritual ground

¹ Dhammapada-aṭṭhakathā, ii, p. 218: jātiyā ca bhogā ca kulaṃ.

² Digha, i, p. 99: jātivādo itī pi gottavādo itī pi.

³ Ibid., i, p. 99: āvāha-vivāha-vinibandhaṃ.

triyas were openly claimed to have been entitled to a superior position.' Throughout the early Jaina and Buddhist texts, a sharp distinction was sought to be drawn between the Brāhmaṇas as they ought to have been and the Brāhmaṇas as they actually were, that is to say, between the ideal and the fact. In drawing a correct picture of the social life in India as revealed in the ancient Jain and Buddhist texts, we are concerned with the Brāhmaṇas as they actually were. As for the other view, even on the frank admission on the part of the Jainas and Brāhmaṇas, there were ideally perfect Brāhmaṇas in the past. Their criterion was applied to the Brāhmaṇas of the time who became degenerated on account of their gradual deviations from the ancient path of purity or morals, absence of greed, contentment and magnanimity. What they themselves aspired to be was the ideally perfect Brāhmaṇa. When the Brāhmaṇa stood theoretically for the ideal, the nature of the claim was not that all those who passed in society as Brāhmaṇas lived or were capable of living up to that ideal. Similarly, when the Khattiyas contended for the ideal of Jinahood or Buddhahood, the nature of the claim was not that all those who passed in society under the name of Khattiyas became or were capable of becoming Jinas or Buddhas. The claim indeed was that it was among the two upper divisions that there lay the real possibility of the birth of highly endowed persons capable of realising the ideal or ideals and remoulding human civilisation.

In the Dasa-brāhmaṇa-Jātaka, Vidhura, the wise man of the Kuru court, divides the Brāhmaṇas into ten categories, classes or types (dasa-brāhmaṇa-jātiyo) and sweepingly criticises them as placed in each category: the Brahmins who went about like physicians (vikicchakasamā) with sacks containing sanctified and therefore important medicinal roots and herbs, offering themselves to cure diseases for money. Those who like servants (paricārakasamā) used to ring little bells as they went before as heralds of kings and their ministers, served as messengers or even followed the calling of wagon-drivers. Those who in the garb of ascetics behaved like tax-collectors (niggāhakasamā), determined not to leave the place until something was given to them by way of alms. Those who begged alms in another garb of ascetics with long nails and hairs on the body, etc., and covered with dust and dirt were like diggers of the soil for uprooting the stumps (khāṇughāṭasamā). Those who like tradesmen (vāṇijakṣamā) used to sell various fruits, planks, wood, sweets, scents, honey and ointment. Those who like the Ambaṭṭhas and the Vessas carried on agricultural trade, did farming, gave away their daughters for money and acted as matchmakers. The Purohitas who interpreted omens, castrated and branded animals and acted as butchers (go-ghātakā). Those who armed with the sword and the shield and axe guarded the business-quarter and led the caravans through roads infested with robbers and thus resembled the Gopas and Nisādas. Those who in the garb of hermits behaved like hunters (luddakasamā), killed hares, cats, lizards, fish and tortoises. The Yājñikas who in performing the Somayāga for lucre acted like bathers (malamajjanasamā) to the kings.

✓ Similarly the criticism of the Brahmin position offered in the Pali Vāseṭṭha Sutta clearly implies that the Brāhmaṇas of the time followed the pursuits of agriculturists (kassakā), craftsmen (sippikā), order-carriers (pessikā), tradesmen (vāṇijā), soldiers (yodhājīvā), sacrificers (yājñakā) and landlords (rājāñṇā) as various means of their livelihood.¹

In the Fragment on Sīlas, it is clearly stated that the Brāhmaṇas, secular as well as religious, earned their livelihood by such low pursuits as those of apothecaries, druggists, physicians and surgeons, priests, occultists and sorcerers, soothsayers, fortune-tellers, palmists, foretellers, interpreters of dreams and signs and omens, calendar-makers, astrologers, appraisers, selectors of lucky sites for the erection of homesteads and buildings and edifices, architects, collectors of alms by diverse tricks and clever devices, story-tellers and ballad-reciters, landholders, traders, cattle-breeders, farmers, match-makers and messengers. Although they belonged to a religious order, stood for the highest religious ideal, and were expected to live up to that ideal, in practice they appeared as hoarders of wealth and as persons who cared to live the aristocratic life of luxury and of pleasure and of ease and to witness and take part in all worldly amusements, games and sports, feasts and festivities.¹

¹ Sutta-nipāta, p. 122; Fick, Social Organisation, p. 221f.

A more correct picture of the Brahmin position in the Indo-Aryan society of the Age may be drawn on the basis of the Buddha's classification of the Brāhmaṇas into five types: Brahmasamā, or those resembling the Brahṁā; Devasamā, or those resembling the gods; Mariyādā, or those respecting their ancient tradition; Sambhinna-mariyādā, or those disregarding their ancient tradition; and Brāhmaṇa-caṇḍālā, or those who lived a vulgar life. In the first category are placed the Brāhmaṇas of high and pure birth through seven generations on both the father's and the mother's side, who after the practice of brahmacariyā and the complete study of the four Vedas with all the auxiliary works, took up the position of teachers, depending for their livelihood only on alms, and thereafter renounced the world to live the life of lonely meditation and holy communion. In the second category, are placed those Brāhmaṇas who differed from the former only in one respect, namely, that in the second stage of life they took up the position of married householders and as such they married girls only from their own class. They met their wives in proper time only for the purpose of procreation. Otherwise they lived a life of moral rectitude. In the third category, are placed those Brāhmaṇas who differed from those of the second class only in one respect, namely, that they did not renounce the world in the third stage of life but continued to live a household life, strictly adhering to their ancient tradition. In the fourth category, are placed those Brāhmaṇas who differed from those of the third class only in this respect that they married girls from all social grades, the  and untouchables included, and engaged in sexual intercourse for the purpose of procreation as well as sensual pleasure. In the or last category, are placed those Brāhmaṇas who differed from those of the fourth only in this respect that besides marrying girls from all social grades, they adopted with impunity all manner of pursuits, agriculture, trade, cattle-breeding, fighting as soldiers, government service and the rest, as a means of livelihood (sabbakammehi jīvitam kappeti).¹

¹*Agga*, i, p. 4f.; Dialogues of the Buddha, i, p. 6f.

The second classification of the Brāhmaṇas is interesting and important as presenting two sides of the picture in contrast, on one side, supreme worth, moral elevation, intellectual perfection and spiritual fervour, and on the other, worthlessness, moral degradation, dullness and worldly-mindedness.

So far as occupation of the Brāhmaṇas as a basis of social distinction was concerned, we find that the study of the Vedas with all the auxiliary sciences and arts, the teaching of the Vedas along with all sciences and arts useful to the State and to the people at large, and the office of a priest appertaining to the religious part of all social ceremonies constituted their monopoly. If the Khattiyas, Vessas, or even Suddas appeared as their rivals as teachers, it was only in the field of ethics and spirituality.

In speaking of the Brāhmaṇas, the early Jain and Buddhist books place them either in the usual social environment or in the hermitages. In the first connection, they are introduced either as those who were in the service of the king (rājakammikā), or as those who had followed different professions of their own. In the second connection, they are introduced as those who went out of the social environments and lived the life of tāpasas or isis in forest homes called assamas with or without their families and resident pupils. Of those in service of the king, the most important was the Purohita. Next to him in importance were the amaccas or mahāmattas (councillors and ministers). The Yācakas (sacrificers) and others were no better than assistants in the office of the Purohita. Partly in connection with the king, they held the position of mahāsālas or heads of Vedic institutions. They came to represent the sotthiya class of Brāhmaṇas who were occasionally employed by the kings as dūtas (ambassadors). The Brahmins also filled the office of senāpatīs (generals), and issatthas, or yodhājīvas (soldiers), chariot-drivers, trainers of elephants, legal experts and judges. To the people in general they rendered services as purohitas and priests, as physicians and druggists, as astronomers and architects, as ballad-reciters and matchmakers. They pursued various other vocations of life as well in their own independent capacities as private citizens. The economic position of the Brāhmaṇas as a class, other than those in high royal service, the mahāsālas, and the few farmers and traders, could not but be poor as they were wholly dependent on an uncertain income from fees, gifts, and alms.

The Purohita occupied a peculiar position in the court. Though in the service of the king, he was not counted among the king's officers. But he was partly entrusted with official functions and surpassed the royal officers in many respects in importance and influence.¹ As house-priest of the king, the Purohita advised him in secular and spiritual matters (atthadhammānusāsako). He acted as the ācariya or preceptor, the sacrificial priest and the house-priest.² He was the person to invoke the favour of the gods on behalf of the king or his family, and it was also in his power to do him harm. He performed the sacrifice with the assistance of other Brāhmaṇas to guard against misfortunes suggested through bad dreams, or through some unusual natural phenomena.³ He was expected to be able to predict the result of all important undertakings on the part of the king by means of signs or constellations of stars. The Purohita was preferably appointed from among the teachers, playmates, comrades or class-fellows of the king, so that he might be always trusted and relied upon as the best friend in weal and woe.¹ The guarding of the king's treasures was part of his duties.² In one instance, he is described as the king's officer (rājakammika);³ in another, he replaces the Senāpati in the matter of judicial duties.⁴

¹ Fick, op. cit., p. 164.

² Jātaka, ii, p. 376; iv, p. 270; v, p. 127.

³ Ibid., i, p. 334f.; ii, p. 46.

The office of the Purohita was not necessarily hereditary, though the books record instances where it was held by the same family for generations together to justify the appellation, purohitakula.⁵ Bāvari, for instance, was born in the family of Pasenadi's Purohita, and was the teacher of Pasenadi during his boyhood.⁶ But there are many other instances where the king was at liberty to appoint his own Purohita. It was, however, considered a legitimate expectation that after the death of Purohita he would be succeeded in his post by his son. When Govinda, the Purohita of king Disampati of Videha, died, his son Jotipāla was appointed in his post at the suggestion of the crown-prince, Renu. The Purohitas of the six sub-kings were trained by Mahāgovinda.⁷ In the Susīma-Jātaka,⁸ we read that after the death of the

¹ Jātaka, i, p. 289; ii, p. 282; iii, p. 31.

² Ibid., iii, p. 513f.

³ Ibid., i, p. 439.

⁴ Ibid., ii, p. 187f.

⁵ Ibid., i, p. 437.

⁶ Paramatthajotikā, II, p. 580.

⁷ Dīgha, ii, p. 230f.; Aṅguttara, iii, p. 373.

⁸ Jātaka, ii, p. 46f.

Purohita other Brāhmaṇas objected to the consecration of the State elephant by his son on the ground that he was still too young and was wanting in scriptural knowledge. The main source of income of the Purohitas was the fees and gifts received from the kings on all festive occasions and at the time of sacrifices. The gifts included land-endowments, women, maidens, slaves, male and female, and live-stocks. Fick seems to be right in his suggestion that here lay the origin of the landed property and worldly prosperity of the Purohitas. Among the Purohitas appointed from among the Brāhmaṇas versed in the Vedic lore, Mahāgovinda, Bāvari and others may be singled out as those who were Brahmasama-brāhmaṇas. There were others who were either unworthy of the office they held or whose virtue did not come up to the Brahmanic ideal.

¹ In the monarchies, the Brahmins figure among the umaccas and *mahāmāttas*¹ who, too, were rich and influential by virtue of the office held by them. The strength and quality of administration largely depended on their honesty and efficiency. They were the great diplomats and specialists in the rules of royal polity. In the Mahāparinibbāna Suttanta, we have mention of Sunidha and Vassakāra as two able Brāhmaṇa ministers of king Ajātasattu under whose supervision the village of Pāṭaligāma was fortified and the city of Pāṭaliputta was built. It was again by the tactful machination of Vassakāra that the strong unity of the Vajjīan confederacy was broken and the Vajjīs could be easily conquered. Cāṇakya under whose guidance Candragupta was able to found the powerful Moriyān empire in India, belonged to this official rank.

The Sarabhaṅga-Jātaka speaks of Jotipāla, son of the Purohita of the king of Benares by a Brahmin wife, who was appointed commander-in-chief, ~~for his great mastery~~ and skill in archery. When he was first appointed, his dāna was one thousand kaḥāpanas and after he had defeated 500 archers in an open contest, it was increased to one hundred thousand. In appreciation of his high proficiency, all the people of Kāśī offered him money, which amounted to eighteen hundred crores.¹

In the Buddha's time, there lived at Ekanālā in Dakkhinagiri a Brāhmaṇa of the Bhāradvāja clan, who was a rich agriculturist. Five hundred ploughs were needed to cultivate the fields owned by him. On the day of the festive sowing (maṅgalavappa), he used to distribute

¹ Jātaka, v, p. 127f.

• food to a very large number of people.¹ The Somadatta-Jātaka, on the other hand, relates the story of a poor Brāhmaṇa farmer who himself ploughed his field and whose son was a pādamūlika or menial in a royal court.² The Jātakas record other instances where the Brāhmaṇa farmers drove the plough with their own hands.³

In the Mahāsutasoma-Jātaka, we see that a wealthy Brāhmaṇa was engaged in trade. He carried on trade between the east-end and west-end of India, transporting his goods in 500 wagons.⁴ We read also of ordinary Brāhmaṇa tradesmen and hawkers who roamed about in the country for wares.⁵

The Phandana-Jātaka tells the story of a Brāhmaṇa who took to the profession of a carpenter (vaḍḍhaki), collecting wood from the forest and making wagons for sale.⁶ In a rare instance, we find that a Brāhmaṇa youth who lived in a frontier village, earned his livelihood by selling the hunted beasts.⁷ The reason, as suggested by Fick,⁸ was purely economic.

¹ Sutta-nipāṭa, Kasi-Bhāradvāja Sutta; Saṃyutta, i, p. 171f.; E. J. Thomas, The Life of Buddha, p. 117.

² Jātakas, ii, p. 165.

³ Ibid., iii, p. 162; iv, p. 278.

⁴ Ibid., v, p. 471.

⁵ Ibid., ii, p. 15.

⁷ Ibid., ii, p. 200.

⁶ Ibid., iv, p. 207.

⁸ Fick, op. cit., p. 247.

Some of the Jātakas speak of Brāhmaṇas and Brāhmaṇa family of great wealth and influence (aḍḍhā, mahaddhanā, mahābhogā, mahāsālakulā). They mention some Brāhmaṇas whose wealth amounted to eighty crores (asīti-koṭi-dhanavibhavā).¹

According to Pali scholiasts, the Mahāsāla-Brāhmaṇas were those who were men of substance (mahāsārā), whose hoarded wealth amounted to eighty crores.² But the Mahāgovinda Suttanta describes them as heads of the Vedic colleges.³ The Pali stock list of eminent Kosalan Brāhmaṇa Mahāsālas contained the names of Caṅki, Tārukkha, Pokkharasāti, Jāṇussoṇi, Todeyya and Lohicca. Of them, Caṅki was established at Opasāda, Tārukkha at Iochānaṅkala, Pokkharasāti at Ukkatṭhā, Jāṇussoṇi at Sāvattḥī, Todeyya at Tudigāma and Lohicca at Sālāvati. Each of them lived in a royal domain, given to him as a royal fief by king Pasenadi.⁴ Similarly we read of Kūṭadanta who was established at Khāṇumata in Magadha and of Soṇadaṇḍa who was established at Campā. They lived each in a royal domain, given to him as a royal fief by king Bimbisāra.⁵ The localities where

¹ Jātaka, ii, p. 272; iv, pp. 15, 22.

² Paramatthajotikā, II, p. 313.

³ Diḡha, ii, p. 283.

⁴ Law, Srāvastī, p. 15.

⁵ Law, Rājagṛha, p. 36; Diḡha, i, pp. 111, 127.

they lived with their disciples became known as Brāhmaṇagāmas.

As observed elsewhere,¹ these Brāhmaṇas became rich and powerful only because of certain permanent land-grants and endowments, made by the kings. The localities, as the description goes, full of life and covered with much grassy land, woodland and corn fields around Northern India, were dotted over with such Brāhmaṇagāmas. The Brāhmaṇas as Ma-hāsālas had a control over them as regards their revenue and the judicial and the civil administration, as was determined by the terms of royal grants (rājadeyyam brahmadeyyam). The Purohitas in respect of learning and social status belonged to this very class of Brahmins.

In the Brāhmaṇa texts, two privileges are claimed for the Brāhmaṇas, namely, unmoles-tibility and immunity from execution. They were not required to pay rents in so far as the land-endowments were concerned. The Pali texts do not bear testimony to any privileged position enjoyed by them in the eye of the law. It is clearly stated in the Madhura Sutta that a criminal, whether a Brāhmaṇa or not, was liable to execution.² The Jātakas definitely speak of the execution of Brāhmaṇas.³ The early Buddhist and Jain texts record no instances where the Brāhmaṇas discharged worldly duties along with sacerdotal functions.

¹ Law, Śrāvastī, p. 15; Fick, op. cit., p. 244.

² Majjhima, ii, p. 83f.

³ Jātakas, i, p. 439; Fick, op. cit., p. 212.

It should also be noted that even in the Buddha's time, the Udicca Brāhmaṇas, meaning the Brāhmaṇas who either belonged to Kuru-Pañcāla¹ or those who claimed descent from them, occupied a pre-eminent position among the Brāhmaṇas as a class.² The epithet brahmabandhu (Brahmā's favourite) was applied at first as a term of contempt to the Brāhmaṇas of Magadha.³ But their position gradually improved so far that in the Āraṇyaka period their views were quoted with respect.⁴

The Khattiyas represented the ruling class, family, tribe or clan, claiming the Aryan descent. Wherever they founded a territory or colony, they lived either under a monarchical or a tribal, oligarchical or republican form of government. In monarchies, the kings were their best representatives. The members of a royal family passed as Khattiyas. In oligarchies, such as those of the Licchavis, Mallas and Śākya, all the members bore the family title of rājā, which means a leading member of the

¹ JRAS., 1920, 99f.

² Jātaka, i, pp. 324, 356, etc.

³ Āitareya-Brāhmaṇa, vii, 27; Kātyāyana Śrautasūtra, xxii, 4.22; Līṭyāyana, viii, 6.28; Fick, op. cit., p. 215.

⁴ Vedic Index, ii, p. 116.

ruling clan. The royal families originated from the reigning kings through succession.

The Khattiyas as a class were expected to be warriors by their training and occupation. They had, theoretically at least, the right to rule, maintaining internal order and peace and protecting their territories against their enemy. But the reigning king was not necessarily a man of the Khattiya family. In the Jātakas we read that where the reigning kings having been considered unworthy of the throne, the people in a body replaced them each by a Brāhmaṇa.¹ In the event of a king's death he was generally succeeded by the Uparājā (viceroy) appointed by him. The Uparājā might be either the deceased king's younger brother or his eldest son by his chief queen. When, after the death of Mahākamsa of Asitañjana, his elder son, Kamsa, became king, he made his younger brother, Upakamsa, the Uparājā. The same thing happened as to Sāgara, king of Madhurā, and his younger brother, Upasāgara.² Among the ten sons of Upasāgara and Devagabbhā, one was anointed as king-overlord and the rest were to take up the position of subordinate potentates.³ As a rule, as pointed out by Fick, the sons of the queen consort (aggamahesī), who was to be of the same caste as the king, were considered legitimate heirs to the throne, the eldest or fittest of them being chosen for kingship. But this legitimacy was not always regarded as an essential condition.¹ In one instance, we find that the reigning king appointed the son of a woman wood-gatherer as the Uparājā, who duly succeeded to the throne.² The Mudupāṇi-Jātaka offers us an instance where the king made his nephew (sister's son) and son-in-law his successor.³ During the reign of king Bhatiya of Magadha, his son Bimbisāra ruled the newly conquered kingdom of Āṅga as his viceroy.

¹ Jātaka, i, p. 326.

² Ibid., iv, p. 79.

³ Ibid., iv, p. 81f.

In the absence of the Uparājā appointed by the deceased king, the kingdom usually devolved on his son, preferably on the eldest son, by his chief queen. When a king died without an heir, the duty fell upon the Purohita to find out a worthy successor.⁴ In all cases, the formal anointment of a person as king depended upon the consent and combined will of the courtiers of the deceased king and his subjects.

The king was freely recognised as the foremost of men (rājā mukhaṃ manussānaṃ).⁵ The fan, diadem, sword, umbrella and slipper constituted the five regalia (pañcavidhakakudhā)

¹ Fick, op. cit., p. 123.

² Ibid., ii, p. 323f.

³ Vinaya Mahāvagga, vi, 35.8.

⁴ Jātaka, i, p. 133; iv, p. 148.

⁵ Ibid., iii, p. 238; cf. iv, p. 31.

The majesty of his person, brightness in his appearance, stateliness in his presence, power in his will, force in his command and pomp attaching to his court made the position of the king a highly coveted one among men; so also was the case of the queen among women. The tasting of sumptuous food and drink, dalliances with the ladies of the harem, sleeping on a rich and costly bed, entertainment given by the courtezans excelling in the art of dancing, singing and instrumental music, and unrestrained joy in a processional drive to the royal pleasure-garden are mentioned and described as the five private enjoyments by which a person might be attracted to kingship.¹

In theory a king of a Khattiya family was to marry a princess from the royal house of equal social rank. In practice, however, he could or did actually marry girls and women from all social grades at his sweet will and promote them to the rank of his queens. The number of queens did not generally exceed three or five.² When a vacancy occurred, specially in the rank of the chief queen, it was filled up by promotion or new appointment. The royal harem was filled with maidens and women from all social grades. The high-class courtezans who were not allowed to live within the palace compound, came also into close personal contact with the king. The books contain instances where, even in historical times, princes were begotten on them, e.g., Prince Abhaya, son of Bimbisāra, was born of Ambapālī. The Jātakas mention an instance in which Vāsudeva saw a Caṇḍālī on his way to the park, and in spite of her low birth, married her, making her his chief queen. Her son, Sivi, succeeded to the throne of Dvāravātī. Some of the kings were so profligate in their ways that no handsome women could escape them. The fate of the captured queens depended on the victor's whims and caprices. In the new household, they sometimes had to exchange places with their maids. Even the father employed the dancing girls to persuade his sons to indulge in worldly pleasures. The want of a male issue to succeed to the throne was keenly felt in the royal family as well as by the subjects. In an extraordinary case, the king having no son by any of the women in his harem, let out in the streets the queens and all, for a week from time to time under a religious sanction (dhammanāṭaka).¹ In Pali literature, the birth of king Caṇḍapajjota¹ is said to have resulted from an appointment and holy contact. Thus the king with the princes and courtiers as well as landed and business aristocrats may be shown to have played the part of subverters of the social order and social morality. With them polygamy was the rule² and monogamy the exception, with the result that the princes of the royal blood and sons of the Brahmins were distinguished by the names of their mothers, e.g., Ajātasattu, Vedehiputta, Sāriputta, Moggaliputta, even the Barhut Gateway inscription of Dhanabhūti bearing a clear testimony to this. It was a custom among the Vajjīs, as noted before, to make courtezans (gaṇikās) from girls of perfect beauty.

¹ Jātaka, v, p. 505f.

² King Udena of Vamsa, for instance, had five queens: Sāmāvatī, the adopted daughter of his treasurer Ghosaka, Māgandiyā, a Brahmin girl, Gopālamātā, daughter of a peasant, Vāsuladatā, daughter of Candapajjota and Sāgarikā, daughter of a Sinhalese king. See Malalasekera, op. cit., i, p. 379f; Law, Ancient Mid-Indian Kṣatriya Tribes, p. 136.

¹ Jātika, v, p. 279.

The marrying of the maternal uncle's daughter was prevalent in some of the royal families³, as also among certain ruling clans, such as, the Śākya and Koliya.⁴ The tradition of polyandry is associated, in the Jātakas and Great Epic, with the five sons of Paṇḍu and Kāṇhā, described in the former as daughter of the king of Kāśī, and in the latter as daughter of king Drupada. The Pali legend of the Śākya

¹ Buddhist Studies, ed. by B. C. Law, Chap. VII.

² Even a righteous king like Aśoka had queens more than one.

³ Jātaka, ii, p. 323.

⁴ Prince Siddhārtha married Rāhulamātā who was his maternal uncle's daughter.

of their ancestors as princes of the Okkāka-so, under the pressure of circumstances, married their own sisters.¹ The legend records only without implying that this form of marriage was customary among the Śākya.
 The prevalent custom, as a pre-historic custom, is presupposed, as evidenced, by the Dasaratha-Jātaka² and the story of Yama and Yamī in the R̥gveda.

The princes of the royal house were generally eager, at the instigation of their mothers, to secure the throne at the expense of their fathers, the reigning kings. When they showed such a tendency or when their intrigue was detected, the king either imprisoned them or sent them to exile, or made them Uparājās, allowing them to actively participate in the administration of the kingdom, or a part of it. In the Buddha's time, Prince Viḍūḍabha seized his father's throne with the aid of the general, Dīghakārāyaṇa.

In the Pali Suttas, kings are distinguished as belonging to three ranks: cakkavattī overlord, issara or adhipati, and padesarājā. In all the three ranks, they were absolute rulers or despots, benevolent or otherwise, so far as the internal administration of the empire, kingdom or province, was concerned. The main sources of their income were the land duties on trade commodities, unclaimed and presents on festive occasions. They appear to have owned private lands, and the ploughing or sowing by them, like any other big farmers, was one of the great festivals of the year.¹ The conquest of a kingdom and annexation of a new territory enabled the victors to obtain abundance. The victory celebrations were one of the memorable festive times. Hunting of deer was a favourite pastime of many kings. The happiness and joy of the subjects greatly depended on the good rule and righteousness on the part of the ruler, and their misery and distress on his misrule.² The chariots of the kings were drawn by four horses of superior breed, all-white in colour. The state-elephant preferably all-white, was a special object of veneration, and according to popular belief, the welfare of the kingdom or territory depended on its auspicious presence. The famine due to drought was sought to be remedied by the presence of such elephants.³ The state-elephant bore special names, e.g., Pundarika.⁴ The Indian army was composed of the elephant-riders,

¹ Jātaka, v, p. 426; Sumaṅgalavilāsini, i, p. 258.

² Ibid., iv, p. 123f.

¹ Jātaka, iv, p. 167.

² Ibid., v, p. 98.

³ Ibid., ii, p. 365f.

⁴ Pundarika was the name of the state-elephant of king Pasenadi.

activity, charioteers and infantry. The mock-fights, ~~re-~~calls, marching of troops through the streets, and the like were no doubt enjoyable sights. The seasonal festivals, announced from time to time, were observed. The Samajjās or Samājas afforded occasions for big feasts, musical entertainments, dramas, operas, ballad-recitations, improvisation of verses, wrestling, bouting, duels, bull-fights, buffalo-fights, cock-fights, and the rest. The remission of taxes and release of prisoners were two of the traditional acts of the king's mercy. The construction of roads and bridges, excavation of tanks, sinking of wells, planting of shade-trees, erection of public halls, laying out of parks and gardens, maintenance of alms houses, provisions against drought and famine in the shape of public granaries and storehouses were the most notable among the works of social piety. The king was not only the head of the executive but also the supreme administrator of justice and final court of appeal for criminal cases. In peacetime, the Senāpatis, as the king's deputies, functioned as judges.¹ As for the administration of criminal justice, the best system was one which prevailed among the Vajjians, which consisted of several courts, the lowest being represented by the Vohārikas and the highest

¹ Jātaka, ii, p. 186.

by the rājā or President. One of the intermediate courts was a tribunal constituted by representatives of the eight confederate clans (aṭṭhakulikā). The lower court could acquit the accused on its own authority but in order to punish him, had to refer the case to the next higher court.¹

Along with the prevention of famine, the suppression of thieves (corā) was one of the principal tests of a successful reign. The famines, distinguished in the Divyāvadāna (p. 131) into three kinds—Cañcu, Śvetāsthī (= Pali Setatṭhika)² and Śalākāvṛtti, occurred mainly on account of the dearth of rain-water (anāvṛṣṭi). But the failure of crops or scarcity of food was due as well to floods, the action of fire and similar other causes. The Divyāvadāna preserves a tradition of a twelve-year-famine of the Śvetāsthī type which caused a dire distress to the people of Kāśī; the Vinaya-Piṭaka mentions a famine which broke out in Northern India during the Buddha's time and the Jaina tradition refers to one during the reign of Candagutta Moriya.

The coras, as distinguished from ordinary thieves³, were as follows:—burglars (sandhi-chedakā), plunderers of villages (gāmaghāta-corā), highway robbers (pañthaghāta-corā), message-

¹ Law, Some Kṣatriya Tribes of Ancient India, pp. 102-103.

² Vinaya, iii, p. 6; iv, p. 23.

³ Samyutta, ii, p. 188.

senders (pesanakacorā) and criminal tribes living in forests (aṭavicorā). They were either isolated individuals or formed different gangs, each under a ring-leader (corajetṭha). The criminal laws provided for brutal and horrible forms of punishment, including putting on stakes and throwing down from a precipice, from which circumstances the precipice of a Rājagaha hill became known as Corapapāta. Sometimes the oppressive rulers or their officers were in league with the gangs of thieves or robbers. In a solitary instance, an educated Brahmin youth turned out to be a fierce highway robber and became an object of great terror to the people of Kosala and even to so powerful a king as Pāsenadi.¹ Among the epidemics, the most virulent was known as ahivātakaroga, which was a kind of plague that broke out at Rājagaha, Sāvattṭhī and other places. The free supply of medicinal roots, fruits and herbs was another act of social piety on the part of the righteous king.²

The Raṭṭhikas, Pettanikas and Bhojakas were three classes of royal officers as well as hereditary feudal lords or landowners and landholders. They seem to have been represented mostly by the Khattiyas.

¹ Majjhima, ii, p. 101f.

² Law, Drugs and Diseases known to the early Buddhists, in Woolner Commemoration Volume, p. 163.

Though the Khattiyas were the warriors par excellence, the recruits to the military regiments of a kingdom or a territory were not necessarily all Khattiyas. As noted before, even those born of Brāhmaṇa families adopted the profession of Yodhājīvas. In the Jātakas, however, the Uggaputtas occupying superior military ranks are all described as Khattiyas. In a notable instance, we find that a Khattiya prince renounced his right to kingship in favour of his sister and took to trade as his profession on this condition, however, that his brothers, the reigning kings, would exempt him from the payment of duties and taxes.¹ This fact goes only to prove that even the Khattiya traders, if not otherwise exempted, were as much liable to pay duties and taxes as other members of the trade. The same as to the gahapati whether they were Khattiyas, Brāhmaṇas or Vessas. There were wealthy and influential persons among the Khattiyas as among other classes of people. It is only those Khattiyas, among whom the tribal tradition formed a strong social tie, who were naturally inclined towards endogamy and strict adherence to the rules of commensality.

✓ Though the term gahapati in its general sense was applicable to all who lived the life of a householder, irrespective of classes or social grades, by general usage it was restricted to the setthi or bankers who were the best representatives of the Vessas. They were the gahapatis par excellence, just as the Khattiyas were the warriors par excellence. There are single instances of gahapatis: Anāthapiṇḍika, Mendaka, Citta, Nakulapitā, Potaliya, Sandhāna and Hāḷiddhikāni, where gahapati 'almost assumes the function of a title'.¹ The canonical Pali texts speak often of the Khattiya-mahāsālas or wealthy nobles, Brāhmaṇa-mahāsālas or wealthy Brahmins and Gahapati-mahāsālas or wealthy gentry.² Buddhaghosa gives the minimum monetary strength of each of the three classes of mahāsālas, that of the Khattiya being the highest.³ The gahapatis as financiers figured as highly important persons in the royal court. As bankers they controlled the whole of trade and commerce, agriculture and industry. They were at the same time the business magnates in a city or town. They married within their own class, their main consideration at the time of marriage being samānajāti and samānagotta.⁴ Their wives and daughters as female members of aristocratic families strictly observed the Purdah system, and as such

¹ Jātaka, iv, p. 84.

¹ Rhys Davids and Stede, Pali-English Dict., sub voce gahapati.

² Samyutta, i, p. 71; Niddesa, ii (Culla-N.), sec. 135.

³ Law, Śrāvastī, p. 19.

⁴ Dhammapada-aṭṭhakathā, ii, p. 218.

remained concealed from public view and except on a day of religious festival.¹ Besides the kings and wealthy nobles, there were others who could well afford to keep and maintain the gaṇikās or prostitutes. An idea of the cash hoardings of the rich bankers of the time might be gathered from the fact, however exaggerated, that the banker Anāthapiṇḍika of Sāvattthī easily spent fifty-four crores of gold coins for the purchase of Prince Jeta's garden, erection of a monastic establishment thereon and its formal and festive consecration.² The hoards had to be carried as cart-loads. A single piece of jewellery presented to Visākhā³ by her father-in-law, the banker Migāra, cost him one hundred thousand. As dowry she received from her father, Dhanañjayaseththi of Sāketa and originally of Rājagaha, five hundred carts full of money, five hundred carts full of vessels of gold, etc., ghee, rice, husked and winnowed, also ploughs, ploughshares and other farm implements, and five hundred carts with three slave-women in each, along with big cattle, bulls and milch cows.⁴

Though by definition the Vessas formed the third grade of the Indo-Aryan society with

¹ Dhammapada-aṭṭhakathā, iii, p. 100f.

² Vinaya, Cullavagga, vi, 4.9; Jātaka, i, p. 92.

³ E. J. Thomas, The Life of Buddha, pp. 105-6.

⁴ Malalasekera, op. cit., ii, p. 901.

trade and commerce, agriculture and farming' as their distinctive occupation, in point of fact, there was hardly any social grade which did not participate in production, distribution, export and import, sale and purchase of trade commodities. So on the basis of occupation alone, the social distinction accorded to the Vessas as a class could not be maintained. Trade and farming as the occupation of the Vessas could be taken to mean that the economic aspect of social life was dominated by persons born in the Vessa families, especially the gahapatis.

In the Apadāna, a young banker (setthiputta) gives the following description of himself. Born in the family of a banker, he was endowed with the five pleasures of the senses. While inside his palatial residence, he was entertained by the dancing girls with music, vocal and instrumental, and operas. The young and childish maidens and others of the female retinue pleased and teased him with jokes and pranks. The barbers, bath-attendants, cooks, wreath-makers, jewellers, acrobats and wrestlers made him gay day and night. The poor and needy, all classes of beggars and vagrants appeared at his door along with religious mendicants of various denominations. The traders and merchants from various countries, even those from the distant kingdom of China, (Cīnaratṭha) and Sonaḥbhūmi (Suvannaḥbhūmi) visited him. The basket-makers (~~pe~~śakārā), weavers (pesakārā), leather-workers (camma-kārā), carpenters (tacchakā), metal-workers (kammārā), blacksmiths, goldsmiths, tinsmiths, jewellers (maṇikārā), potters (kumbhakārā), cloth merchants (dussikā), bow and arrow makers (usukārā, cāpakārā), perfumers (gandhikā), tailors (tunnavāyā), dyers (rajakārā), oilmen (telikā), fuel-suppliers (kaṭṭhahārā), water-barriers (udahārā), household servants (peṣsikā), cooks (sūpikā), artists or clerks (rūpadakkhā), door-keepers (dovārikā), sentinels (anīkaṭṭhā), drain-cleaners (sandhikā), sweepers (puppha-cchaḍḍakā), elephant-riders (hatthārohā), and elephant-trainers (hatthipālā) used to visit him either for jobs and orders or for selling their wares.¹

In a well-laid city or town, rooms had to be made for the residence of the various classes of Khattiyas, Brāhmaṇas, Vessas, Suddas elephant-riders, horsemen, chariot-drivers, foot-soldiers, bowmen, sword-bearers, standard-bearers, adjutants, suppliers of food to the army, uggas (high-born warriors), military scouts, brave and valiant fighters, helmet-wearers and other fighting units, slaves, wage-earners, wrestlers, cooks, hotel-keepers, barbers, bath-attendants, turners, wreath-makers, goldsmiths, silversmiths, workers in lead, tin, iron and brass, blacksmiths, jewellers, weavers, potters, leather-workers, chariot and wagon-makers, ivory-workers, rope-makers, comb-makers, spinners, basket-makers, bow, string and arrow-makers, decorators, paint-makers, dyers, washermen, tailors, money-exchangers, cloth-merchants, perfumers, grass-cutters and fodder-suppliers, fuel-suppliers, servants, sellers of leaves, fruits and roots, sellers of rice and sweetmeats, sellers of fish, meat and wine, professional actors, dancers, acrobats, magicians, ballad-reciters, corpse-burners, sweepers, veṇas, * nesādas,¹ courtezans, dancing girls, slave girls carrying water, and traders and merchants from various countries and places.²

The hereditary craftsmen, or those who followed professional callings, such as those of architects, mechanics, carpenters, smiths, masons, ivory-workers, dyers, weavers, carriage-builders, leather-workers, potters, jewellers, fishermen, butchers, and the rest, organised themselves into various guilds (senis, pūgas), agreeing to be governed by their own laws and customs. They functioned either as producers, manufacturers, suppliers or sellers. There was no hard and fast line to be drawn between one and the other, for the producer or the manufacturer might himself appear to be a seller, shop or storekeeper. Those who followed a common profession, were led by a gregarious instinct to settle down or live in one and the same locality, from which circumstance the localities came to be distinguished as vaḍḍhaki-gāma, kammāra-gāma, kumbhakāra-gāma, and the like. By their habitual adherence to the rules of marriage and eating within their own class or group, the guilds were being hardened into castes. The social process was further complicated by the general tendency to segregate one class of workers from another within the same profession, the oil-pressers, for instance, being distinguished from the owners of oilman-stores, the elephant-trainers from the elephant-drivers, the coach-builders from the coach-drivers. Among the barbers, washermen, shampooers, etc., the degrees of their family prestige depended on their working for the royal household or for that of the courtiers, noblemen, senāpatis, purohitas, and the like. The gradation proceeded almost by insensible degrees. Although, as a rule, the Vessas, Suddas, and outcastes did not or could not aspire to marry from the Khattiya and Brāhmaṇa families, it was not always possible to prevent the intermingling of the various classes.

¹ Law, Concepts of Buddhism, p. 241.

² Mūlinda, p. 331

The traditional number of cities and towns in Jambudīpa varies from sixty to eighty-four thousand, which is evidently an exaggerated figure. Sixteen were the great countries, as we noted, and six were the most prosperous and flourishing cities. The bulk of the populace lived in gāmas or villages. The number of inhabitants in a village might vary from thirty to one thousand families. The common occupation of the villagers was agriculture or farming. The cultivable lands around the villages were known as gāmakhetas. Every care was taken to protect them from dangers. Fences ¹ (vatā) were erected as protection against wild animals, and snares ² were laid to catch wild birds. Watchmen ³ were appointed to keep watch on them. Care was taken to irrigate the fields.⁴

The holdings might be small enough which could be managed by the members of one family with the help, in some cases, of a hired man ⁵, or they might be big enough, extending over one thousand karīsas (acres) or more.⁶

The khetas were cultivated by means of ploughs driven by oxen.⁷ Soil was turned with

¹ Jātaka, i, 215.

² Ibid., i, 143.

³ Ibid., ii, 110.

⁴ Ibid., iv, 167; v, 412.

⁵ Ibid., i, 277.

⁶ Ibid., iii, 293.

⁷ Ibid., ii, 166 spades and watered by means of conduits. Seeds were sown at the usual time and crops, when ripe, were cut, threshed on a prepared mould (khalamāṇḍala) and then taken to the granary.

Various kinds of crops were grown on the soil. Rice was the chief article of food¹ and grown abundantly. There is mention of different kinds of rice, viz., sāli, vīhi, tanḍula, etc. Of the other food crops, the chief were barley (yava) and millet (kaṅgu), grams, beans and sugarcane.² Cocoanut trees were cultivated on an extensive scale.

Besides these there were grown spices like pepper (marica), mustard, dry ginger, garlic, oilseeds like castor, fibre crops like cotton. These were the chief agricultural produces. Grass was collected for domestic animals.

Among the domestic animals, cattle were held in high esteem as a source of wealth. Dairy farming was in an advanced state and there was an abundant supply of milk, curd, butter and ghee. Sheep were reared for wool and other necessities.

There were jungles all over the country. Trees were cut for wood and timber. A number of people liked animal hunting in forests. There was a regular industry of catching birds like parrots, peacocks, quails, partridges, mallards,¹ etc., by means of snares that were sold in the markets.

¹ Jātaka, i, 340

² Ibid., i, 339: ucchulakkhetṭānikarontā

The land was enjoyed by the cultivators by the payment of a tithe to the kings in the monarchies. Tithe was calculated as a share of the raw produce levied in kind, the amount varied from 1/6 to 1/12 portion of the produce. It was levied according to the wish of the ruler and was collected at the barn doors¹ or in the fields by the village syndicate, or headman (gāmabhojaka) or by an official (mahāmatta). The king could dispose of all abandoned and forest lands,² as he liked and all ownerless lands were acquired by the crown. The king could remit the tithe to any person.³ In case of cultivated lands, owners could sell or dispose of them in any way they liked.

The agricultural produces and industrial goods were sold in markets, inland and foreign. The inland and foreign trades flourished side by side. The export and import of goods were carried on along land-routes and water-routes. Accordingly the merchants and traders were distinguished as thalapathakammikā or those who followed land-routes, and jalapathakammikā or those who followed water-routes.⁴

¹ Jātaka, ii, p. 378.

² Digha, i, p. 87.

³ Jātaka, iv, p. 169.

⁴ Ibid., i, p. 121.

As regards the inland land-routes, two were the main: Dakkhiṇāpatha or the south-western route which extended from Rājagaha to Patitthāna on the Godhāvarī via Sāvattthī and Sāketa,¹ and Uttarāpatha or the north-western route which extended from Sāvattthī and Kosambī to Takkhasilā via Madhurā across the sandy desert of Rajputana. There were also local roads connected with these two great routes. The Apanṇaka-Jātaka speaks of the five kinds of wild (kantārā): the maru, vaṇṇu or nirudaka (sandy), cora (infested with robbers), vāla (infested with wild animals), amanussa (dominated by evil spirits), and appabhakkha (where food was scarce).² Thus the journey through them was perilous.³ The merchants and traders who used wagons or bullock-carts were known as Satthavāhā or caravan merchants. A caravan consisted, in some instances, of five hundred wagons and its course was guided by a land-pilot (thalaniyāmaka), the direction being determined in relation to the position of stars.⁴ The fords were crossed with the help of boats, and when the river-beds dried up, with the help of strong local bulls or bullocks.⁵

¹ Sutta-nipāta, vv, 976-7 and 1011-13; Buddhist India, pp. 30f. and 103f. a

² Jātaka, i, p. 99.

³ Ibid., i, p. 107f.; Dīgha, i, p. 73; Majjhima, i, p. 276.

⁴ Ibid., i, p. 107.

⁵ Ibid., i, p. 194f.

The Jātakas testify to the existence of trade-relations between Benares and Ujjain,¹ Videha and Kasmīra-Gandhāra,² Benares and Sāvattthī,³ Rājagaha and Sāvattthī,⁴ Magadha and Sovira.⁵ The Satthavāhas had to carry arms as protection against highway robbers and other contingencies. The merchandise was transported by means of country boats that plied along the rivers of Jambudīpa, upwards along the Ganges as far west as Sahajāti, along the Yamunā as far as Kosambī; downwards along the Ganges as far as Campā and Tāmalitti.

Foreign trade was carried on by sea, and in some instances, partly by sea and partly by land. The Bāveru-Jātaka speaks of India's maritime intercourse with Babylonia, described as a birdless country.⁷ The Suppāraka-Jātaka relates the voyage of a merchant ship carrying six hundred passengers for four months across the six seas, the destination not given.⁸ The Saṅkha-Jātaka offers us an account of the wreck of a merchant ship on its way to Suvannabhūmi, the ship being 800 cubits in length, 600

¹ Jātaka, II, p. 248.

² Ibid., II, p. 385

³ Ibid., II, p. 294f

⁴ Sutta-nipāta, vv, 1012-3; Buddhist India, p. 103.

⁵ Jmānavaṭṭhu-atthakathā, p. 336.

⁶ Buddhist India, p. 103.

⁷ Jātaka, No. 339.

⁸ Ibid., No. 463.

in width and 20 fathoms in depth. In this case, the merchant was a Brāhmaṇa of Benares.¹ The Silānisamsa-Jātaka narrates the story of the wreck of another merchant ship in the midst of the ocean. In this instance, the merchant was a barber.² The Samuddavāṇija-Jātaka narrates the story of the arrival at an island in the sea of a thousand families of carpenters in a large ship built by them.³ The Mahājanaka-Jātaka relates the story of how Mahājanaka reached Suvannabhūmi from Videha in a ship with an accommodation for seven hundred caravans with their beasts.⁴ The ship is said to have made 700 leagues in seven days. The Valāhassa-Jātaka tells us the story of the arrival of five hundred shipwrecked merchants from Benares at the town of Sirisavatthu in Tambapaṇṇidīpa, the inhabitants of which were mostly daring sea-going merchants. A matriarchal system of society prevailed in this part of the country owing to the uncertainty of the return of the husbands.⁵ As pointed out by Rhys Davids, in the Pāli Nikāyas, mention is made of sea-voyages out of sight of land and of long voyages

¹ Jātaka, No. 442.

² Ibid., No. 190.

³ Ibid., No. 466.

⁴ Ibid., No. 539.

⁵ Ibid., ii, p. 127f. For details of India's sea-borne trade, see R. K. Mookējee, History of Indian Shipping and Maritime Activity from the earliest times (1912).

lasting even for six months.¹ The course of the ships was steered by the Niyāmaka or water-pilot², the direction of land being sometimes ascertained by the flight of crows (disākākā).³ Rhys Davids further observes 'Later texts, of about the third century B.C. speak of voyages down the Ganges from Benares to the mouth of the river and thence across the Indian Ocean to the opposite coast of Burma, and even from Bharukaccha (the modern Broach) round Cape Comorin to the same destination'.⁴

The *Mahāniddesa*⁵ speaks of India's commerce by sea with Yona and Paṇamayona. If the first place be located in the Punjab, the second place must be located either in Western Asia or identified with some Greek island in the Mediterranean, if not with Ionia proper. Towards the east, it mentions Kālamukha, Suvannabhūmi, Vesunṅga, Verāpatha, Takkola, Tāmali, Tambapaṇṇī and Java as countries visited by the Indian sea-going merchants and speaks also of the manner in which they followed the difficult land-routes after reaching the harbour. Of the places mentioned ✓

¹ Dīgha, i, p. 222, Samyutta, v, p. 51.

² Jātaka, iv, p. 138

³ Ibid., iii, p. 287

⁴ Buddhist India, p. 98.

⁵ Mahāniddesa pp. 154-155, 415.

'Kālamukha may be identified with the Arakan coast and Suvannabhūmi may be located in Lower Burma.¹ The next four places may be shown to correspond to Ptolemy's Chryse Chora, Besyngeitai, Berbai and Takkola. Tamali is identified by Sylvain Lévi with Tāmraliṅga in Malay Peninsula. Tambapaṇṇi and Java are no other than Ceylon and the island of Java. The *Apadāna*² expressly mentions the visit of merchants from Malaya (Malay Peninsula) and the distant land of Cina (China).

It is difficult to say what the sea merchants traded upon and the nature of the articles of export and import. The *Suppāraka-Jātaka*³ shows that they made their fortune by collecting gems, corals, etc., from the seas. They appear to have traded also in muslins, the finer sorts of cloth, cutlery and armour, brocades, embroideries, perfumes, drugs, ivory works, jewellery and gold.⁴

Within the country, produce was brought to markets for sale. Benares was one of the most important commercial centres. The other big cities also commanded a considerable amount of trade and exchange. Foodstuffs for the towns

¹ R. C. Majumdar, Suvarṇadvīpa, p. 56f.; Lévi, Études Asiatiques, Vol. II, Ch. II.

² Apadāna, i, p. 2.

³ No. 463.

⁴ Buddhist India, p. 98.

were brought to the gates, apparently from villages and the sale transactions were carried on there.¹ There were āpaṇas or shops where commodities were displayed for sale², while there were antarāpaṇas where things were stored before sale.³ Merchants could enter into partnership or temporary partnership and there could arise disputes as to the shares of profit.⁴ The commodities sold in these āpaṇas were textile fabrics, groceries and oil, green groceries⁵, grain⁶, perfumes and flowers⁷, articles of gold and jewellery, carriages, arrows, etc. The hawkers carried their wares⁸ for sale in portable trays. For the sale of strong drinks there were taverns known as pānāgāras.⁹ Prices were not fixed and there was competition by which the dealers wanted to prevail upon the purchasers. The vice of adulteration was also not unknown. On the part of the buyers there was the haggling of price.¹⁰ Things for the royal households were purchased by an officer known as Aggahakāraka who fixed the prices of the required commodities. The prices so fixed could not, however, be changed by appeal. There was also a check on the officer

¹ Jātaka, iv, p. 445.

² Ibid., i, pp. 55, 350.

³ Ibid., i, p. 411.

⁴ Ibid., i, p. 290f.; iv, p. 82.

⁵ Ibid., i, p. 251f.

⁶ Ibid., ii, p. 267.

⁷ Ibid., i, p. 404.

⁸ Ibid., ii, p. 267.

⁹ Ibid., iii, p. 21.

¹⁰ Ibid., i, p. 111f.

from the side of the king. All native and foreign goods imported into the city were assessed and a duty was levied upon them.

Coins appear to have been the chief medium of exchange, but the more primitive means of barter was also not unknown. Barter was not, however, the usual practice. In the Jātakas almost all kinds of prices, fees, pensions, fines, loans, and incomes have usually been stated in terms of coins of different denominations. Among coins there is mention of kākanika, māsaka, aḍḍhamāsaka, pāda, aḍḍhapāda, kaḥāpana and aḍḍhakahāpana.¹ Silver coins do not appear to have been in use and mention of gold coins like *rikkha*² or suvaṇṇa is late and doubtful. There is mention also of cowry shells (sippikāni), but they were probably not used as currency, and the coins mentioned above were probably all made of copper.³

Besides actual currency there were several other legal instruments. Mention is made of letters of credit by means of which big merchants

¹ Buddhist Studies, ed. by B. C. Law, Chap. XV; T. W. Rhys Davids, Ancient Coins and Measures of Ceylon; D. R. Bhandarkar, Carmichael Lectures, 1921, pp. 53, 62, etc.

² Zimmer, Altindisches Leben, 259. It is also called nikkha; D. R. Bhandarkar, Carmichael Lectures, 1921, pp. 53, 62, 63, 64, etc.; Fran Nath, A Study in the Economic Condition of Ancient India, p. 85f.

³ For details, see Mrs. Rhys Davids, Economic Conditions according to Early Buddhist Literature, Cambridge History of India, I, Chap. VIII.

in large cities used to get money from fellow merchants. There is also mention of promissory notes.

There were no banks, and banking facilities were few. Loans could be taken. Money-lending was looked upon as an honest calling but this had already given rise to profit-mongering. Money was lent against bonds (paññā) and there were instances of bad debts which were never repaid. But money-lending was done by professional money-lenders while ordinary people used to hoard up their wealth in piles and conceal them underground or deposited with friends. The nature and amount of such hoarded wealth were recorded on gold or copper plates.¹

In the Anguttara Nikāya we have mention of Satta-vanijjā or trade in living beings.² Buddhaghosa³ explains the word as meaning manussa-vikkaya or traffic in human beings. This traffic might be taken to imply, among other things, traffic in women and slave trade. Prostitution as a social institution was in existence in India from the earliest times, and it had originated, as suggested by some scholars, from abandoned harems of kings, nobles, bankers and others.¹ The Pali literature clearly attests that some of the leading gaṇikās or courtezans of the time made a profitable trade of prostitution by maintaining a regular brothel containing five hundred prostitutes.²

¹ Buddhist India, p. 101f.

² Anguttara Nikāya, iii, p. 208.

³ A celebrated Buddhist commentator who flourished in the 5th century A.D. Wrote many important Pali commentaries—Law, The Life and Work of Buddhaghosa (1923)

In the early Buddhist texts, mention is made of four kinds of slaves: antojātā,³ dhanākkītā, karamarāṇītā, and samaṇdāsabyamupagatā, i.e., those who were born of slave parents or begotten on slave women, those purchased with money, those who were reduced to slavery under coercion by bandits, and those who took to slavery of their own accord. The Jātakas contain instances where the slaves were bought for seven hundred kaḥāpaṇas.⁴

Scholars agree that there was nothing like what afterwards came to be the rigorous caste system in India at the time of the rise of Jainism and Buddhism. But this may not wholly be the correct reading of the fact. The evidence of the later Vedic texts is conclusive that even after death, the custom was to erect sepulchres or tombs of different heights to maintain the distinction between the dead

¹ Barua, Introduction to History of Indian Prostitution by Sinha and Basu.

² Jātaka, iii, pp. 60f. and 436f.; Law, Women in Buddhist Literature, p. 32f.

³ Sumaṅgālavāsini, i, p. 300; Jātaka, No. 545.

⁴ Jātaka, iii, p. 343.

belonging to the four divisions of the people. Though some of the R̥gvedic hymns presuppose the prevalence of the custom of the burial, burial was subsequently replaced by cremation, although the cremation was followed by the consecration of the bones, arranged limb by limb in mounds. The Vedic texts speak of two kinds of citā; agnidagdhā, where the corpses were burnt and anagnidagdhā where they were not burnt. This was precisely the custom in some parts of India in Buddha's time. Accordingly the early Pali texts refer to two different grounds for the disposal of the dead: ālāhana (Ardhamāgadhi, Ālāhana), where the dead bodies were cremated and sivathikā or āmakasusāna where the corpses were simply thrown away to undergo the natural process of decomposition or to be devoured by carnivorous beasts, birds, insects, etc. In cases of larger grounds they were placed in charge of *susānagopakas*¹ who were Caṇḍālas. The texts also refer to an aboriginal custom of burying the dead and washing the bones (aṭṭhi-dopana)² with drunkenness and revelry which was prevalent in southern India.

¹ Dhammapada Commentary, 1, p. 60.

² Aṅguttara, v, p. 216; Sumanāgalavilāsini, i, p. 84. Vide B. C. Law, 'Social, Economical and Religious Conditions of Ancient India according to the Buddhist Texts'—Pathak Commemoration Volume, pp. 68-79.

CHAPTER IV

RELIGION

The social and economic life of a country considered apart from religion, constitutes a sphere of collective existence in which human activities are directed to the twofold pursuit of kāma and attha, i.e., of worldly pleasure and advantage. Religion, on the other hand, constitutes a sphere of collective or individual existence in which human activities are directed to the twofold pursuit of *dhamma*¹ and mokkha, i.e., of perfection of conduct and perfection of personality. By its definition, religion is essentially a system of faith and worship implying as it does human recognition of a personal God entitled to obedience and its effect on conduct, etc. As pursuit of dhamma, religion seeks to mould and remould, adjust and readjust human life, individual and collective, as expressed in various ways in conduct. It either sublimates the grosser elements in human nature or sanctifies all that is normally considered right, proper, good, noble, pure, refined, beautiful, appreciable and enjoyable. As pursuit of mokkha, it implies self-alienation from all things and all interests that connect us with the world. It seeks to bring the individual to a state of self-realisation and self-perfection. Here we are to consider religion only in that aspect in which it may be treated as a potent factor of human life and civilisation.

¹ E. J. Thomas, History of Buddhist Thought, p. 78.

The early texts of Jainism and Buddhism reveal to us a wonderful and highly interesting picture of Jambudvīpa in which the habitual religion of the masses of people was in its varying degrees and forms in conflict and compromise with the higher religions preached by various new schools of thought and new orders of religieux. The masses of people following their habitual religion were broadly distinguished as Devadhammikas or Devavatikas from others who professed to have belonged to distinct orders of hermits and ascetics, among whom discipleship played a prominent part.¹ As Devadhammikas or Devavatikas, the masses of people are said to have been divided into diverse groups of worshippers. The Devadhamma was in its essence some form of a religion of Bhakti, and as such its expression was emotional and its form ritualistic or ceremonial. The taking and keeping of vows in propitiation or honour of the worshipped was its prominent external feature. The connection between the worshipper and the worshipped lay through worship which always implied an act of offering in fulfilment of the vow or promise. The object of worship was the attainment of a desired end. This popular religion of worship was based upon the give-and-take principle. It was through prayer that the worshipper sought to have a communion or communication with the worshipped. The mediation by a holy person was considered necessary. So the office of a competent priest was always in requisition. From the side of the worshipper no amount of offering was considered sufficient and no amount of praise adequate to bring out the divine attributes of the worshipped, who was in each case a deva or devatā, a personal god or goddess, malevolent or benevolent. Thus in Deva-dhamma representing the popular religion of Indīa a belief in the presence of a divine personality was the conditio sine qua non. This personality was either a god or a deity. It was marked throughout by a process of personification of the divine attributes or deification of the worshipped. The distinctive nomenclature for the different groups of worshippers was sought to be determined by the grammatical rule yā yesaṃ devatā, the worshippers are to be distinguished by the name of the deity they worship.¹ Accordingly the devatā or deity was defined by the aphorism: ye yesaṃ dakkhiṇeyyā te tesāṃ devatā.² 'They are the deities to them to whom they are worthy of homage.'

¹ Ullāsa Nāḍḍesa, p. 173f.; Barua in I.H.Q., iii, 1927, p. 261; Bahut, iii, p. 69.

In the Culla Niddesa and other Pali canonical texts, the devas are broadly divided into three classes: sammutidevā, i.e., gods by common acceptance, upapattidevā, i.e., gods by origination and visuddhidevā, i.e., gods by purity. In the first class are placed the kings, princes and the queens and princesses; in the second class, the various deities worshipped by the people; and in the third, the founders of religions, their great disciples and other saintly personages. The books also testify to the prevalence of a general tendency towards finding out the highest personality among the devas (atideva), among the sages (muni-muni) and among the leaders (gaṇa-gaṇī). In the Devadhamma-Jātaka,³ the gods of popular worship are typified by the sun and the moon. There is a longer list given in the Culla Niddesa which includes aggi or firegod, nāga or serpent, suvaṇṇa (suparṇa), i.e., garuḍa, yakkha, asura, gandhabba, mahārāja, canda, suriya, Inda, Brahmā, minor gods and quarter-gods (disā). The list also includes such deified heroes as Vāsudeva, Baladeva, Puṇṇabhadda and Maṇibhadda. In it are included also the representatives of such religious orders as those of Ājīvikas, Nigaṇṭhas, Jāṭilas, Paribbājakas¹ and Aviruddhakas. The list also mentions elephants, horses, cows, dogs and crows among the objects of worship.² The list given is not exhaustive. There are passages in which the upapattidevas are located in three spheres of the universe, those dwelling on the earth being called bhummā or terrestrial, those in the firmament as antarikkhacarā, and those in the highest region (ākāsaṭṭhā). At the time of the rise of Jainism and Buddhism it is inconceivable that the masses of people paid their homage to a particular deity of this class to the exclusion of the rest. On the other hand, the evidence tends to prove that all of them were included in a growing pantheon. And yet it is not incorrect to suppose that the masses were divided into several groups, each with its own supreme hero or object of worship, e.g., the Vāsudeva-vātikas formed a group which had Vāsudeva as its hero, and so as to the rest. That these popular groups represented different classes of devotees is evident from Pāṇini's rule appertaining to Bhakti. As illustrations, Pāṇini mentions the worshippers of Vāsudeva, Arjuna, Deśa and ¹ Law, Historical Gleanings, Chap. II.

¹ The rule is implied in Culla Niddesa, p. 174. This is the same as Pāṇini's rule sāṃya devatā.

² Culla Niddesa, p. 174.

³ No. 6.

² Culla Niddesa, p. 173f.

Janapada.¹ The process of amalgamation must have taken place gradually with the inclusion of all the deities in a common pantheon. In doing so a classification of them was necessary and the result was a hierarchy in different forms.

The hierarchy as developed in early Buddhism placed the four grades of arūpabrahmas as the highest in the scale, below them the sixteen grades of rūpabrahmas, below their ranks the six classes of kāmāvacaradevas, the lowest of them being represented by the four mahārājas or lokapālas exercising their suzerainty over the rest of the gods, and the demigods, whether ākāsaṭṭhas, antarikkhacaras or bhummas. Below the kāmāvacara gods are placed ordinary men, below them the animal world, below it the spirit world and below it the different purgatories. Even above the arūpabrahmas are placed the saintly Buddhist personalities called Ariyas (elect) forming eight grades of spirituality and above all stands the incomparable Buddha.

The hierarchy as conceived in early Jainism seems to place the Vemānikadevas as the highest in the scale, then the Jyotiṣīs, the Vāṇamantarās and Bhavanavāsis. The Vemānika gods and angels are represented by Sohamma Isāṇa, Sanankumāra, Māhinda Bammhā (Brahmā), Lantaga, Mahāsukka, Saḥassārū, Acchutapadī and the rest. Māhinda's heaven is the heaven of the thirty-three gods together with the lokapālas. In the Jyotiṣī class are placed the sun, the moon, the planets, comets and stars including Rāhu. The Vāṇamantradevas comprise the bhūtas, pisācas, yakkhas, rākshasas, kinnaras, kimpurisas, gandhabbas, etc. The asuras, nāgas, supannas, vijju (lightning), fire, continent (dīva), ocean (udahi), disākumāras (quarter-gods), pavāṇa (wind-gods) and thunder-gods (thaṇiya) represent the Bhavanavāsīs. Below them are the earth-lives, water-lives, fire-lives, and wind-lives. Above all of them stands the incomparable Jina with his advanced disciples.¹ A similar hierarchy was developed by the Ājīvikas in their cosmography.²

¹ Pāṇini, IV, 3.95-100.

As thoroughly discussed by Rhys Davids,³ the two most important Pali suttas that contain the list of popular gods and deities are the Mahāsamaya and the Mahā-āṭṭanāṭiya. The real interest of these two suttas lies in the fact that they offer us the names of hosts of popular gods and goddesses affiliated to the realm of the four lokapālas: Dhataratṭha of the eastern quarter, Virūḷhaka of the southern quarter, Virupakkha of the western quarter, and Vessavaṇa Kuvera of the northern quarter. Evidently they were the guardians or presiding deities of the four continents. Religious fancy led the people to locate the heaven of the thirty-three gods on the top of the Mount Sumeru and the world of the asuras at the bottom of it, below the water, and to conceive a protracted war between the thirty-three gods and the asuras for the possession of Inda's or Sakka's domain. The formation of the hierarchy in ancient Indian pantheon must have resulted from a long course of development of religious ideas and beliefs and of conflict and compromise between them.

¹ Aupapātika Sūtra, secs. 32-37.

² Dīgha, i, p. 54.

³ Buddhist India, Chap. 12.

As for the higher religions, mention is frequently made of the contemporary representatives of the ancient Vedic sages' generally enumerated as ten in number. They formed the sotthiya or mahāsāla class of Brahmins from among whom the Purohitas or house-priests of the kings and wealthy nobles, etc., were chosen and appointed. We have mention also of the teachers of the early upanishadic schools such as the Addhariyas (Aitareyas?), Tittiriya (Taittiriya), Chandokas (Chandogya), Chandāvas (Śatapatha?) and Bavharijas (Bāhvaras).¹

In addition to them, the Books speak of the Tāpasas, Paribbājākas and Samaṇas of different orders. Among the Tāpasas some are honoured as isis or sages. The Paribbājākas, mostly

¹ Digha, I, p. 237.

Brahmins by birth, are broadly distinguished as Ekadaṇḍikas and Tedaṇḍikas. The Samaṇas were typified by the followers of the six teachers known to the Buddhists as six tiṭṭhiyas. But to this class belonged also the Sakyaputtiyas or followers of Buddha Gautama.

In the opinion of Hopkins¹, Vedic religion or Brahmanism was confined to a small section of the people of India. It was rather an island in the sea, the majority of the people following their own religions which consisted in beliefs in spells, incantations, charms and spirits. This acute observation of Hopkins is true only in so far as it appears that the Brahmins as a class including even those who were householders and followed different callings, belonged to a distinct religious order. According to the Brahmanic doctrine, the fulfilment of the religious ideal was to proceed by stages, three or four, called brahmacharya, gārhasthya and vānaprastha, the third culminating in the life of the Parivrājaka, Yati, Bhikṣu or Sannyasin. This is well borne out by the Buddha's description of the five types of Brahmins in the Anguttara Nikāya. But if Brahmanism was based upon the Vedas as it professed to be, in no stage of its history, it was free from the belief in the efficacy of spells, incantations, charms and the like. As a matter of fact, Brahmanism was the only form of higher religion in India which could affiliate all the popular cults without any feeling of contradiction. The religious beliefs and practices grew up among different tribes, races and nations and were cherished by them with veneration and joy. It was left to the founders and exponents of the higher religions to decide how far, and in which manner these were to be utilised, modified, improved or replaced. But we shall see anon, in spite of the apparent victory and predominance of the higher religions over the folk, the latter always held the ground and the sum total of results of the age-long conflict was nothing but a widening of its scope and enrichment of its contents. The folk religion afforded indeed the living ground of synthesis of contending faiths. And with the march of time when it became sufficiently strong and self-conscious, it asserted itself as a great religion of Bhakti influencing the whole domain of the higher faiths, Jain, Buddhist, and all.

We have in the Pali canonical texts a faithful account of the Vedic religion as practised by the Sotthiyas and Mahāsālas of the age. On its emotional side, it consisted in the invocation of Inda, Soma, Varuṇa, Īsāna, Pajāpati, Brahmā, Mahiddhi and Yama. The invocation was practised either by way of supplication (āyācana-hetu), or by way of prayer (patthanahetu), or by that of eulogy (abhinandanahetu).¹ The invocation of Sirī, the Goddess of Luck, mentioned in the Brahmajāla and other suttas is also typically Vedic.² The Jātaka description of the four Indian Graces, viz., Āsā (Hope), Saddhā (Faith), Sirī (Luck) and Hirī (Modesty) as four daughters of Sakka, the king of the gods, is originally Vedic. From the R̥gveda to the Jātaka, the trend of the change was from abstract conceptions of the four fundamental female attributes or virtues to their personifications.³ In the Lalitavistara and the Mahāvastu versions of the Ātānāṭiya Sutta, the four varieties of the Goddess of Luck are associated with Virūḍhaka, the regent of the southern quarter, and they bear the appellations of Śrīmatī or Śriyāmatī, Yaśamatī, Yaśahprāptā or Lakshmiṃmatī, and Yaśodharā. The name of the Goddess as recorded in the Barhut label seems to correspond to Śrīmatī. The Barhut representation of Sirimā has, as shown by Rhys Davids, a faithful correspondence in her images as found in the temples of South India. The Siri-Kālakaṇṇī Jātaka (No. 383) introduces us to a Siridevī or Lakkhī, who is described as the daughter of Dhataratṭha, regent of the eastern quarter. In this Jātaka, Siri or Luck is compared and contrasted with Kālakaṇṇī or Misfortune, the latter being described as the daughter of Virūpakkha, regent of the western quarter.¹ Thus religion sought through its mythology to create various types of Graces and to present them through poetry and art for the improvement of female types in society. Maṇimekhalā, the female angel of the sea, saving the sailing ships from wrecks, was a new but beautiful creation of the later age. She belonged to the realm of the four Mahārājas.²

¹ Dīgha, i, p. 244f.

² Ibid., i, p. 11.

³ Jātaka, v, p. 392t

On the sacrificial side, the same religion is said to have consisted in various forms of sacrifice involving the slaughter of cows, bulls, buffaloes, elephants, horses, goats, rams, etc.³ The Aśvamedha (horse sacrifice) and Vājapeya, (soma sacrifice), associated with secular Brahmanism, were two forms of sacrifice having a political significance.⁴ The Purisamedha (human sacrifice) is also associated with the Vedic religion.⁵ These sacrifices are said to have been insisted on by the Purohitas and the Mahāsāla class of Brahmins. These were attended with big feasts, offering of gifts and distribution of charities. The performance of great sacrifices

¹ Barua, Barhut, Bk. II, p. 73.

² Jātaka, iv, p. 17; vi, p. 35; S. K. Aiyangar, The Buddhism of Maṇimekhalā. (Buddhist Studies) p. 1f.

³ Sutta-nipāta, Brāhmaṇapadhammika Sutta; Dīgha, i, Kūṭadanta Sutta.

⁴ Saṃyutta, i, p. 76; Aṅguttara, ii, p. 42; Sutta-nipāṭa, v, 303.

⁵ Ibid.

by the Vedic ascetics in the three regions of Gayākhetta was a notable annual function eagerly awaited by all the inhabitants of Aṅga and Magadha.¹ Similar sacrifices were performed in other parts of the country where the Brahmins of these classes lived or had influence.

On the ritualistic side, the Vedic religion or secular Brahmanism consisted, as we are told, in Aggihutta or oblations to fire, and diverse other kinds of homa.

The Buddhist and Jaina texts do not at all exaggerate the state of things when they inform us that secular Brahmanism consisted in spells, charms, incantations, exorcism, witchcraft, occultism, interpretation of dreams, signs, and cries of beasts and birds as foreshadowing coming events, soothsayings, etc. They correctly refer to the Atharva Veda as the scriptural source of the Brahmins from which followed the development and intermingling of popular occultism and science. It was indeed through the Atharvanic process that an alliance between secular Brahmanism and all primitive cults was possible, an alliance or blending from which even Hinduism of the 20th century is not free. Anyhow, as the books bear ample evidence, the Purohita and Yājaka classes of Brahmins fully utilised it in guiding the course of daily life of the people. They were exactly the class to whom the kings, courtiers, and the rest turned for consultation and ministration when they were frightened by some unnatural dreams or occurrence of abnormal events, celestial or terrestrial, or by apparitions.¹ Curiously enough, the leaders of such highly protestant religions as Buddhism and Jainism could not help satisfying this insistent popular demand. The Buddha is represented as a better interpreter of dreams than the Brahmins, when he was consulted by king Pasenadi at the instance of his queen.² The improvisation of Parittas as saving chants in early Buddhism was undoubtedly due to the dire necessity of meeting the same popular demand.

¹ Barua, Gayā and Buddhhaqayā, p. 110.

The people of India in their worldly existence had certain fears which are enumerated in the Pali canonical texts as sixteen,³ and in the Milinda ⁴ as seventeen, such fears as might arise from the tyranny of the ruler, from the action of thieves, robbers, etc., from the action of men, malevolent spirits, stars, water, air, fire, famine, disease, pestilence, reptiles and wild beasts, etc. They were naturally inclined to avail themselves of all possible means to avoid

¹ Dīgha, 1, p. 9f.

² Jātaka, 1, p. 234f

³ Anguttara, 11, p. 121f

⁴ Milinda, p. 196

or overcome them. No religion was acceptable to them if it could not assure them of the potency of its means to overcome their fears and to inspire confidence in order to obtain a fearless state. Secular Brahmanism employed all its means to prove its usefulness to them. When other contending faiths entered the field and endeavoured to win the people over to their side, they were required to fulfil the same task by such means as they could devise. The Buddhists adopted the solemn chanting of the Parittas as one of the means. The essence of the Parittas was saccakiriya, or the effective expression of the wish by an open declaration of the truth. Through the Parittas they tried to get rid of the objectionable features of the Brahmanic rituals. The æsthetic aspect was improved and the matter was simplified. But in so doing they failed to anticipate how the parasite with its root stuck to the main tree would grow disproportionately in course of time.

The people were believers in the efficacy of pronouncement of benediction by the priests and other holy persons, in amulets, and the like. In order to oust the Brahmin vested interests from the field, the Jains and Buddhists had to introduce certain maṅgalas, claimed as more efficacious. With the Jains the eight maṅgalas were the eight auspicious symbols or emblems: Sovatthiya (Svastika), Sirivacca (Śrīvatsa),

Nandiyāvatta (Nandyāvarta), Vaddhamāṇaga (Vardhamāna), Bhaddāsana (Bhadrāsana), Kalasa, Maccha (Matsya), and Dappaṇa (Darpaṇa).¹ Other enumerations of maṅgalas are also met with in the Jaina texts.² The Buddhists introduced chanting of the Muṅgala Sutta, laying much stress on the thirty-seven points of maṅgala or moral condition of human welfare.³

In seeking to draw a sharp distinction between the Brahmin as he was and the Brahmin as he ought to have been, the Jains and Buddhists served only to bring the Brahmanic religious ideal into bold relief with the result that Māhaṇa (= Brāhmaṇa) became one of the distinctive epithets of Mahāvīra, and the Buddhist arahants came to be praised as Brāhmaṇas par excellence.

By maṅgalas the people of India understood the sight of certain auspicious objects, all-white chariots, etc., the hearing of certain auspicious sounds, and the touch of certain auspicious things.⁴ They also understood by them the performance of certain auspicious rites for the birth of a male child or for the marriage of boys

¹ Aupapātika Sūtra, sec. 49.

² Ibid., secs. 53, 55.

³ Maṅgala Sutta in the Khuddakapāṭha (pp. 2-3); and Sutta-nipāta (pp. 46-47). Cf. also Mahāmaṅgala Jātaka (No. 453).

⁴ Jātaka, IV, p. 72f.

and girls and for making the journey to a distant place successful.¹ Secular Brahmanism provided the people with appropriate rituals for all domestic rites of the Indo-Aryan householders. To bring and keep them within their fold, the Jains and Buddhists were required to suggest better substitutes. But in point of fact, they did the work so imperfectly that even their own lay supporters had to be left to adhere to the Brahmanic scheme of social life and to their own family, tribal, national and local customs, with minor modifications here and there.

The Brahmins as Lakkhaṇa-pāṭhakas suggested certain prominent bodily characteristics of a Mahāpurisa or Great Man. As the early Jain and Buddhist texts go to prove that the Jainas and Buddhists simply utilised them in establishing that the founder of their own order was the greatest of men.²

Secular Brahmanism allowed the Brahmins to marry from all social grades, and they did, as a matter of fact, marry girls from all sections of the people. The Jains and Buddhists who were otherwise strongly opposed to the caste system, stood as great champions for the purity of blood and family prestige. They praised those Brahmins who married girls from their own class only, and in doing so they became ipso facto contributors to the social orthodoxy. The cow sacrifice was freely allowed in secular Brahmanism. The eating of beef was not as yet forbidden in society, even among the Brahmins and hermits. The Buddha raised his strong voice against cow-killing, and for the matter of that, against beef-eating.¹ Thus unintentionally he contributed to the social orthodoxy in so far as it expressed itself in the form of prohibition of certain articles of food.

¹ Asoka's Rock Edict, ix; D. R. Bhandarkar, Asoka, p. 322f.; R. K. Mookerjee, Asoka, p. 153ff.

² Avapātika Sūtra, sec. 16; Dīgha, iii, Lakkhaṇa-Suttanta, p. 142f.

The Brahmins as a class of priests with vested interests were in favour of the monarchical form of government, and the Brahmanic influence was much stronger in monarchies than in oligarchies. In theory, the Jains and Buddhists were in deep sympathy with the democratic constitution. The Jaina religious Order which was evidently constituted with Mahāvīra as the gani or leader and nine among his prominent disciples as *ganadharas*² or sectional leaders, was modelled on the republican constitution of the nine Licchavi or Mallaki clans, and the Buddhist religious Order, too, with its stronger internal cohesion and marked regimental discipline, may be shown to have been based upon the principle of unity and concerted action which characterised the life and constitution of a Khattiya tribe forming an oligarchy. The difference between the two organisations lay in the fact that the Jaina Order was based upon the idea of confederacy, while the Buddhist Order professed the regimental unity of a single ruling clan. But the popular predilections for kingship and overlordship were not without their influence on the Jain and Buddhist minds, particularly on the latter. The Pali canonical texts reveal throughout a growing tendency to establish parallelism between the position of a righteous king as an earthly overlord and that of the Buddha as the supreme founder of the Kingdom of Righteousness¹ as well as between the attributes and functions of the two. Even with regard to the disposal of the body of the Buddha after his demise, the direction was to adopt the method which applied to the funeral of a king-overlord. The ultimate result of adaptation to the monarchical tradition was that within a purely democratic constitution of the Buddhist Saṅgha, the Master came to be enthroned as the supreme Lord of Righteousness with Sāriputta and Moggallāna as his two Dhammasenāpatīs and an inner circle of eighty great disciples (asīti-mahāsāvakā).

¹ Sutta-nipāta, p. 50f., Brāhmaṇadhammaka Sutta.

² Mrs. S. Stevenson, The Heart of Jainism, p. 61.

¹ Note that in the Aupapātika Sūtra, sec. 16, Mahāvīra is praised as Dhamma vara-cāuranta-vakkavattī.

Secular Brahmanism recommended the daily practice of salutation to six quarters by a good householder at dawn after bath. The practice was thus linked up with a symbolical scheme of the duties and obligations of a householder which the Buddha tried to render significant by an orientation from his own point of view.¹ But the total result was nothing but the prominence of the ideal which was implied in the Brahmanical scheme.

The early Jain and Buddhist texts also present a vivid and fairly detailed picture of the life of the tāpasas or ancient order of hermits. According to the Brahmanical scheme, the hermits represented the Vānaprastha (Vanapatthā) stage of life. Their retirement from the world is known in Pali as isipabbajjā. The persons who adopted this mode of religious life were mostly Brahmins and Khattiyas; a few of them were gahapatis. Only in a solitary instance a mātaṅga,² or caṇḍāla figures as a notable personality among them. The tradition is conspicuous by the absence of the Suddas. The hermits on their retirement from the world selected a beautiful spot in a woodland or a sequestered valley having a river, or a stream, or a natural lake, near by, and built a hermitage which was no better than a leaf-hut or bamboo cottage in sylvan surroundings. Either they retired alone or with their families and in some instances with their resident pupils. They lived on roots and fruits, wild-grown rice and vegetables. Their garments were made of birch-bark or antelope-skin. The matted hair on their head marked them out to the people at large as Jāṭilas. Long before the rise of Jainism and Buddhism the hermits in large numbers built their hermitages in the Himalayan forests, in the Vindhya Range and along the banks of the Ganges, Yamunā and other sacred rivers. The hermitages were fenced round, and inside, some of them reared mango and other fruit trees, while the lakes or pools near by were adorned with varieties of lotus flowers; some of them were so idcally situated and so attractive that they were said to have been built by Vessakamma, the heavenly architect.¹ The instances are not wanting in which the royal princes in exile betook themselves with their wives to forest-life, leading the life of hermits. When and how the institutions commenced we cannot definitely say. But it seems to have had a very early beginning indeed. The Jātakas and Jain texts² maintain a tradition of some ancient illustrious contemporary kings of India, all of whom adopted the life of a hermit, viz., Naggaji of Gandhāra, Dummukha of Pañcāla, Nimi of Videha, Bhīma of Vidarbha, and Karakaṇḍu of Kāliṅga. The Uttarādhyayana Sūtra¹ mentions a few other ancient kings who had reached perfection as hermits, viz., Bharata of Bhārata-varṣa, Sagara of Ayodhyā, Maghavan of Śrāvastī, Sanatkumāra and Mahābala of Hastināpura, Śānti, Kuntthu (Kakustha?) who came to be revered as Tīrthaṅkaras, Hariṣeṇa of Kāmpilya, Jaya of Rājagṛha, Daśārṇabhadrā of Daśārṇa, Rudrāyana of Sauvīra, and Vijaya of Dvāravatī. Thus it may be shown that the tradition of hermit-life was not restricted to any particular country or kingdom. It was widely recognised as a well-ordered institution all over the Aryandom from Gandhāra to Videha and Kāliṅga and from Kuru-Pañcāla to Vidarbha.

¹ Dīgha, iii, p. 180f., Sīgālovāda Sutta.

² Mātaṅga Jātaka, Jātaka No. 497.

¹ Cf. Vessantara Jātaka (No. 547); Mugapakkha Jātaka = Temiya Jātaka (No. 538).

² Uttarādhyaṇa Sūtra, Leo. XVIII, Kumbhakāra Jātaka (No. 408).

In the history of the Indian tāpasas, the kingdom of Videha is entitled to much importance. Both the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa and the Makhādeva Sutta² refer to king Māthava, Makhādeva, Maghādeva or Mahādeva, founder of the royal dynasty of Videha, as the first gifted monarch, who was upset at the sight of a grey hair plucked from his head, and taking it to be the sign of death and retirement, he left the world forthwith leaving the throne to his son, Nimi, who along with the long line of successors, the Janakas of Mithilā, followed in the footsteps of his great father. The Brahmadattas of Kāśī appeared to have vied with the kings of Videha in this matter.

¹ Loc. XVII.

² Maṅghama Nīkāya, ii, p. 74f.

If the fall of an apple was important to Newton who reflecting on it, discovered the Law of Gravitation, the appearance of a grey hair on the head or the fall of a withered leaf from a tree was no less important, as the Jātakas¹ tell us, to the Indian hermits who reflecting thereon, found out the inner world of spirituality, immortality and tranquillity.

The retirement of several kings of the same line from the world and the distinction obtained by them as hermits enhanced the family prestige of their successors. It was with some amount of pride that Khāravēla was introduced in his inscription as a scion of a family of royal sages (rājīai-vamsakula-viniśrita), all of whom belonged to the Cedi royal house. Similarly the Janakas of Mithilā and the Brahmadattas of Benar... represented two ancient lines of royal sages.

The great Brahmin hermits became noted as Brahmarṣis. Among them, mention is made in the Jātakas of the sage Śarabhaṅga² who was formerly commander-in-chief of Benares.¹ He built his hermitage somewhere in the Vindhya region on the Godhāvarī. When he retired from the world, many others accompanied him. The number of hermits grew so large that he was compelled to ask his chief disciples to shift elsewhere taking with them as many of the hermits as possible under the circumstances. By his command they went to build hermitages in different kingdoms and countries. Kisavaccha was one of them. Śarabhaṅga is described as a hermit who wore three garments of birch-bark. According to the Aranyakāṇḍa of the Rāmāyaṇa Śarabhaṅga's hermitage was situated not far from Paścavati. It was Śarabhaṅga who keeping Rāma in his view, entered the burning funeral pyre and proceeded to the eternal world of Brahmā in the resurrected divine form of a kumāra. It was undoubtedly a common practice with some of the hermits to die like heroes either by diving into water, or by bodily walking into fire or by a fall from a height.

¹ Jātaka, v, p. 247f.; Mahān . . . 1, p. 450.

² Sarabhaṅga Jātaka, Jātaka, v, p. 125f.

The isipabbajjā of Mahāgovinda, the Brahmin Purohita of king Reṇu of Videha, accompanied by the seven reigning kings, six other Purohitas in a large retinue of the citizens of seven kingdoms, as described in the Mahāgovinda Suttanta¹ and the Jātakas, produced a very deep impression in the country. A popular chronicle, embodied in the Āṅguttara Nikāya, bears an eloquent testimony to it. Mahāgovinda is claimed to have a direct communion with Brahmā Saṃkumāra as a happy result of the cultivation of the four Brahmavihāras: Mettā, Karuṇā, Muditā and Upekkhā. The 'Isigili Sutta in the *Majjhima Nikāya*¹ contains a similar chronicle of five hundred Paccekabuddhas who are otherwise described as great sages of old, and the Khaggavisāṇa Sutta in the *Sutta-nipāta*² and the Paccekabuddha Apadāna in the *Apadāna*³ contain distinct utterances of them. In historical times, Bāvarī, the chaplain of king Pasenadi of Kosala, retired from the world and built a hermitage on the Godhāvarī (Godāvarī) in the Vindhya region. The Pārāyana Vagga in the *Sutta-nipāta*⁴ preserves a glorious tradition of Bāvarī along with his sixteen disciples. As the Jātakas clearly attest, among the tāpasas there were many who practised Yoga or Jhāna, and mastered as many as eight Samāpattis. There is evidence also to prove that the neighbourhood of the hermitages became sites afterwards of many important

¹ Dīgha, ii, p. 220f.

¹ Vol III, p. 68f

² pp 6-12

³ Vol. I, pp 7-14.

⁴ p. 190f.

flourishing cities like Kapilavatthu, Sāvattthī,¹ Kākandī, and Mākandī. Thus the jungles were converted into royal capitals and delightful human localities.

In the instances where the Tāpasas lived all alone or with their families and resident pupils, we cannot conceive of the possibility of a corporate or congregational life. They lived more or less a domestic life in the forest paying occasional visits to the neighbouring hermitages. Occasionally they had to appear in human localities for the collection of salt or to keep invitations from kings. The religious homes in the forests served as a meeting place of the lovers ending in marriage.

It is correctly pointed out that according to the Aranyakāṇḍa of the Rāmāyaṇa, Rāma, while in exile with Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa, walked from hermitage to hermitage from Ayodhyā on the Sarayū to the Pañcavaṭī on the Godāvarī.¹ The Sarabhāṅga Jātaka also shows that in travelling from Benares to the same destination, one had to follow a ekapadikamagga or narrow foot-track under the guidance of a vanacaraka.² But when Bāvari built his hermitage near the Pañcavaṭī during the reign of Pasenadi, there came into existence a high road connecting

¹ Sir Asutosh Mookerji Silver Jubilee Volume, iii, p. 412f

² Jātaka, v, p. 132.

Rājagaha with Patitthāna. Thus the hermits and vanacarakas co-operated in exploring the forest regions and gradually bringing into existence high roads and trade-routes.

The corporate or congregational life became manifest among the hermits when a large number of them came to live in one and the same hermitage, e.g., in the big assama or hermitage of Sarabhaṅga in the Kaviṭṭha forest on the Godhāvarī. In the Buddha's time, there were three settlements or colonies of the Jāṭilas under three Kassapa brothers in the three divisions of the Gayākhetta.¹ The Pali legend concerning Uruvelā seeks to bring out the fact that when in ancient times the hermits came to the place to atone for their sins, there was no corporate life among them.² Even among the Jāṭilas forming three distinct groups, the tie in each group was rather domestic than congregational. Their leaders, the three Kassapa brothers, were born in a Brahmin family of Magadha. They were great personalities; all the inhabitants of Aṅga and Magadha highly revered them. They were fire-worshippers by their cult, the believers in the great sanctity of the waters of the Gayā river.³ The people from all parts of India came on pilgrimage to

¹ Vinaya, i, p. 31f.

² Barua, Gāyā and Buddhagayā, Vol. I, p. 99

³ Udāna, p. 6.

Gayā to perform the holy ablution in a sincere belief that by bathing in the Gayā river they could wash off their sins. There were other sacred rivers where similar ablutions were performed. The Buddhist criticism of the belief and the practice was not without its value.¹ But the belief served as a strong incentive to bathing in the sacred rivers the water of which was hygienic and good for health.

During the period under notice there existed in Northern India various orders of Paribbājakās or Wanderers, who, in the language of Rhys Davids, 'were teachers or sophists who spent eight or nine months of every year wandering about precisely with the object of engaging in conversational discussions on matters of ethics and philosophy, nature lore and mysticism. Like the Sophists among the Greeks, they differed very much in intelligence, in earnestness and in honesty'.² These wandering ascetics, particularly those who were called Brāhmaṇa Paribbājakas,³ were representatives of the fourth or last stage of progressive life. They were known as mendicants (bhikkhus) because they depended for their sustenance on alms collected from door to door,

¹ Maṅghama, I, p. 36f, Vatthūpama Sutta; Uddāna, p. 6, Therīgāthā, pp. 146-47. Gāthās of Punnakā

² Buddhist India, p. 141.

³ Anguttara, I, p. 157; B. C. Law, Historical Gleanings, Ch II, as one-garment men (ekasātakas), as they used to clothe themselves with one piece of cloth, and as shavelings (muṇḍakas), as they shaved their heads clean as a mark of distinction from the Tāpasas who were all Jaṭilas (wearers of matted hair) and from the Brahmin householders who wore a crested lock on their head. As distinguished from the tāpasas they lived a homeless life, without having a fixed residence save and except during the rainy season when they took shelter in deserted houses (suññāgāra), caves (guhā), rocky caverns (kandarā) and the like. Some of them went about naked and were known as acelakas or naggapabbajitas. Those whose garments consisted in antelope-skin were called cammasātakas. The canonical Pali texts introduce to us no less than 30 wandering teachers who were either leaders or members of various orders of Indian ascetics, the number of members of each varying from 300 to 3,000. Some of them were known by their nick-names, some by the names of the gottas they belonged to, some by their external signs and some by their religious practices. They were all contemporaries of the Buddha and so of Mahāvīra. Poṭṭhapāda¹, the rheumatic, had 300 followers; Bhaggavagotta², the wanderer, belonged to the

¹ Poṭṭhapāda Sutta, Dīgha, i.

² Dīgha, iii, p. 1.

Bhārgava family. Pāṭikaputta ¹ was an acelaka ² or naked ascetic. Nigrodha ³, Sandaka ⁴, Sāmaṇḍaka ⁵, Ajita ⁶, Sarabha ⁷, Annabhāra ⁸, Varadhara ⁹, Uttiya ¹⁰, Kokanada ¹¹, Potaliya ¹², Moliyasīvaka ¹³, Sajjha ¹⁴, Sutavā ¹⁵, Kuṇḍaliya ¹⁶, Timbaruka ¹⁷, Nandiya ¹⁸, Vacchagotta ¹⁹, Sūcīmukhī ²⁰, Susīma ²¹, Uggāhamāna ²², Pilotika ²³, Potaliputta ²⁴, Sakuladāyī ²⁵, Vekhanassa ²⁶ (Vaikhānasa), Dighanakha ²⁷, Māgandiya ²⁸, Sabhiya ²⁹, and ¹ Dīgha, iii, pp. 12-35.

² Ibid., iii, pp. 36-57.

³ Maṅghama, i, p. 513.

⁴ Aṅguttara, v, pp. 120-121.

⁵ Ibid., v, p. 230.

⁶ Ibid., i, p. 185.

⁷ Ibid., ii, p. 29.

⁸ Ibid., ii, p. 176.

⁹ Ibid., v, p. 193.

¹⁰ Ibid., v, p. 196.

¹¹ Ibid., ii, p. 100.

¹² Ibid., iii, p. 356.

¹³ Ibid., iv, p. 371.

¹⁴ Ibid., ix, p. 369.

¹⁵ Saṃyutta, v, p. 73.

¹⁶ Ibid., ii, p. 22.

¹⁷ Ibid., v, p. 11.

¹⁸ Ibid., iii, p. 257.

¹⁹ Ibid., iii, pp. 238-240.

²⁰ Ibid., ii, pp. 119-128.

²¹ Maṅghama, ii, p. 22.

²² Ibid., i, p. 175.

²³ Ibid., iii, p. 207.

²⁴ Ibid., ii, pp. 1-22.

²⁵ Ibid., ii, pp. 40-44.

²⁷ Ibid., i, p. 501.

²⁶ Ibid., i, p. 467.

²⁸ Saṃyutta-nipāta, p. 91.

* Sañjaya were the most notable of the class. Their movements were restricted more or less to the Majjhimadesa. Apart from the Brāhmaṇa Paribbājakas, the Pali texts repeatedly speak of the six influential orders of Samanas, the leaders of whom were known to the Buddhists as six titthiyas or leading thinkers: Pūraṇa Kassapa, Makkhali Gosāla, Pakudha Kaccāyana, Ajitakesakambali, Sañjaya Belaṭṭhaputta or Belaṭṭhiputta, and Nigaṇṭha Nātaputta¹. Of them the sixth was no other than Mahāvīra, the reputed founder of Jainism. Sañjaya, as his name implies, was a Khattiya of the Belaṭṭha clan or one born of a princess of the Belaṭṭha family. The remaining four were Brahmins by birth. They too by their habits of life were all wandering teachers, shavelings and mendicants and differed from the Paribbājakas as a class only in their attitude towards the world and the existing social and religious institutions. Pūraṇa as a transcendentalist claimed that the soul (attā) cannot be affected by the moral or immoral action of men. Gosāla was, according to one of the Jain traditions, the son of a Brahmin Paribbājaka couple, and according to another, the son of a Brahmin who was rich in cattle (gobahula). He was pre-eminently a Kosalan teacher. Philosophically he was a determinist and ethically a fatalist. Pakudha Kaccāyana, identified by some scholars with Kavandhin Kātyāyana of the *Prasnopaniṣad*¹ was an eternalist, maintaining that both soul and the world are unchanging realities. Ajita distinguished by the garment of hair which he used to wear, was an avowed atheist denying as he did the possibility of continuance of personal existence after death and consequently the possibility of having reward and retribution for the deeds done in this life. These teachers were all dogmatic in the way they held their respective opinions. As distinguished from them, Sañjaya of the Belatṭha clan who is identified in the Mahāvastu with the Wanderer Sañjaya passed as a great sceptic (Amarāvikkhepaka, Ardhamāgadhī Anṇānika). Nigaṇṭha of the Nāta or Jñātri clan of Vesālī is distinguished from the rest as the propounder of a system of Cātuyāmasamvara or fourfold self-restraint. This is only a rough and ready description of the founders of six different orders and leaders of six different schools of thought who held the field when the Buddha had just started on his career as a religious teacher².

¹ Digha, i, p. 47f.; Kern, Manual of Indian Buddhism, p. 32f.

We are nowhere given in the early texts of Jainism and Buddhism a specific description of the Tāpasas, Paribbājakas or Samanas, taken order by order or school by school, either as regards their food or as regards their dress, habits and goals. All that we can gather from them is only a general description, which is likely to prove misleading. In the Pali Kasapasthanāda Sutta, we read, for instance, 'He feeds on potherbs, on wild rice, on nīvāra seeds, on leather parings, on the water-plant called haṭa, on the fine powder which adheres to the grains of rice beneath the husk, on the discarded scum of boiling rice, on the flour of oilseeds, on grasses, on cowdung, on fruits and roots from the woods, on fruits that have fallen of themselves'.¹

¹ Pras. I.I.

² For details from Buddhist and Jain texts, vide B. C. Law, Historical Cleanings, Ch. III.

This list of ascetic practices concerning food applies mainly to the Tāpasas, and partially only to the Ājīvikas who were followers of Makkhali Gosāla, Nanda Vaccha and Kisa Samkicca.

The following account of practices concerning garment and behaviour is applicable partly to the Tāpasas and partly to the clothed Paribbājakas, and, mutatis mutandis, to the Acelakas and some of the Samana orders: 'He wears hempen cloth; mixed hempen cloth; cloths taken from corpses and thrown away; clothing made of rags picked up from a dust heap, of the bark of the Tiritaka tree; the natural hide of a black antelope; a dress made of a network of strips of a black antelope's hide; of Kuśa grass fibre; a garment of bark; a garment made of small slips or slabs of wood (shingle) pieced together; a blanket of human hair; of horses' tails; of the feathers of owls.

¹ Dialogues of the Buddha, S.B.B., II, p. 230. Sākabhakkho vā hoti, sāmākabhakkho hoti, nīvārabhakkho vā hoti, daddulabhakkho vā hoti, haṭabhakkho vā hoti, kaṇabhakkho vā hoti, ācāmabhakkho vā hoti, piṇṇāsākabhakkho vā hoti, tṇabhakkho vā hoti, gomayabhakkho vā hoti, vanamūla phalāhāro yāpeti pavattaphala bhogēti. Dīgha, I, p. 166.

He is a plucker-out-of-hair-and-beard, a stander-up, a croucher-down-on-the-heels, a bed-of-thorns-man. He uses a plank bed, sleeps on the bare ground, sleeps always on one side, a dust and dirt wearer, lives and sleeps in the, open air, does not mind whatsoever seat is offered to him, goes down into water thrice a day to wash away his sins'.¹ Here the two practices of plucking out of both hair and beard and standing up rejecting the use of a seat are applicable also to the Jaina mendicants. Lastly, the account of the practices concerning the mode of collecting food and eating may be shown to apply to the Acolaka class of the Paribbājakas and the Ājīvika and Jaina types of the Samanas:

'He goes naked, performs his bodily functions and eats food in a standing posture, licks his hands clean after eating, when on his rounds for alms, if politely requested to step nearer or to wait a moment, he passes stolidly on, refuses to accept food if it is brought to him before he has started on his round, if it has been prepared specially for him, to accept any invitation, to accept food direct from the mouth of the pot or pan lest those vessels should be struck or scraped on his account. He will not accept food placed within the threshold, placed among the sticks or pestles. He does not accept food from persons while they are eating, from a woman with child, from a mother giving suck, from a woman when she is in her private chamber. He will not accept food where a dog is standing by or flies are swarming round. He will not accept fish nor meat, nor strong drink, nor intoxicants, nor gruel. He feeds on the four kinds of filth (cowdung, cow's urine, ashes and clay). He never drinks cold water. He is contented with alms received from one house only, or from two houses, or so on up to only seven houses. He keeps himself going on only one alms or only two, or so on up to only seven. He takes his food only once a day, or once every two days, or so on up to once every seven days or up to even half a month'.¹

¹ Dialogues of the Buddha, op. cit., p. 230f.; Digha, i, pp. 166-7.

¹ Based on the Dialogues of the Buddha, op. cit., p. 227f.; Dīgha, 2, p. 166.

The Jaina Aupapātika Sūtra speaks of the 'Tāpasas as those religieux who adopted the Vānaprastha mode of life on the banks of the sacred rivers typified by the Ganges. They were either fire-worshippers, family men or those who slept on the bare ground. They were either sacrificers, or performers of funeral rites, or owners of property. The water jugs and cooking pots were among their belongings. They followed different modes of bathing in the holy waters. Some of them used to blow conchshells, or were kūladhumakas (winnow-beaters). Some of them killed deer for venison and skin, and some killed elephants to make food provision minimising the slaughter of life. Some went about holding a stick erect, or with the gaze fixed on a particular direction. They used the bark of a tree as their garment, and lived either on the seashore or near water at the foot of a tree, feeding on water, air, water-plants, roots, bulbs, barks, flowers, fruits and seeds. They rendered their body cooked as it were by the heat of the five kinds of fire and stiffened by the sprinkling of water ¹.

The Sūtra mentions a class of recluses (pabbaiyā-samaṇā) who were addicted to sensual pleasures, vulgar ways and vaunting, and were fond of singing and dancing ².

¹ Aupapātika Sūtra, sec. 74

² Ibid, sec. 75

The same text distinguishes between the Brāhmaṇa and Kṣatriya Parivrājakas, and describes them as those religieux who either followed the Kāpila school of Sāṅkhya or the Bhārgava school of Yoga, or represented the four grades of Indian ascetics: Bahūdakā, Kuṭibratā (Kuṭīcakā), Hamsā and Paramahamsā. Some of them were Kṛṣṇa Parivrājakas ¹. The Ājīvikas are placed in a different category, their description being the same as in Pali ². It may be noted that even in Gośāla's doctrine, the Ājīvika orders were distinguished from those of the Parivrājakas ³.

A gradation of niṭṭhā or goals aimed at by the Tāpasas, Paribbājakas and Ājīvikas is suggested in the Āupapātika Sūtra, Buddha-ghosa's Papañcasūdanī, some of the later Upaniṣads as well as Gośāla's doctrine of six Abhijātas or grades of spiritual advancement. The six grades are described in terms of six colours as the black (kaṇha), the blue (nīla), the red (lohita), the turmeric (halidda), the white (sukka), and the supremely white (paramasukka ⁴). Corresponding to them we have mention of the following six grades in the Samnyāsa Upaniṣad: ātura,

¹ Āupapātika Sūtra, secs. 76-81.

² Ibid., sec. 120.

³ Dīgha, i, p. 54: ekūnapaññāsa-ājīvasate, ekūnapaññāsa-Paribbājakasate.

⁴ Barua in I.H.Q., iii, p. 267f.

kuṭīcaka, bahūdaka, haṃsa, paramahaṃsa and turiyātītapaṣṣamahāṃsa, saṇiyama or aniyama. According to the Upaniṣads, the goal of the ātura (= kaṇha) is Bhūrloka, that of the kuṭīcaka (= nīla) is Bhuvarloka, that of the bahūdaka (= lohita) is Svargaloka, that of the haṃsa (= halidda) is Tapoloka, that of the paramahaṃsa (= sukka) is Satyaloka, and that of the turiyātītapaṣṣamahāṃsa (= paramasukka) is Kaivalya. The turiyātītapaṣṣamahāṃsa culminates as avadhūta. According to the Aupapātika Sūtra, the destiny of worldly men is Vāṇa-mantra, that of the Vānaprastha Tāpasas is the world of the Jyotiṣī gods, that of the Paribbājakas is Brahmaloка, and that of the Ājīvikas is Acyutapada¹. And according to Buddhaghosa, the goal of the Brāhmaṇas is Brahmaloка, that of the Tāpasas is Ābhassaraloka, that of the Paribbājakas is Subhakiṇṇaloka and that of the Ājīvikas is Anantamānasa².

The various forms of penances (tapas, duk-karakārikā) constituted the external feature of their religious efforts, and the various modes of Yoga or Jhāna practised by them constituted its internal feature. In the Jātakas, many among the ancient hermits are said to have mastered the eight samāpattis, each of them representing a particular form of ecstasy or hypnotic trance. The *Ariyapariyesana Sutta*¹ and other Pali texts mention Ālarakālāma and Uddakarāmaputta as two great Yogis under whom the Buddha learnt the practice of Yoga, better Rājayoga, on his way from Rājagaha to Uruvelā. While at Uruvelā, he practised the hard penances and appānakajhānas (i.e. kumbhakas of Haṭhayoga) of the Acelaka or Ājīvika class of ascetics.

¹ Aupapātika Sūtra, secs. 70, 71, 74, 81, 120.

² Papañcasūdanā, pt. II, p. 1f. & Cūlasīhanāda Sutta.

The common people who were the lay supporters of these various orders of hermits, ascetics and recluses, attached much importance to the austerities and believed in the infinite possibilities of the Yoga practice². The popular belief is that with the development of the supernormal faculties, being one, the gifted man becomes many, having become many, becomes one again. He becomes visible or invisible at his sweet will, he can fly through air like birds on wings, can easily walk on water, as if on solid ground, and can easily go to the further side of a wall or rampart or hill, as if through air, feeling no obstruction. Even the sun and the moon he can touch and feel with his own hands. He can visit any place he likes, even the world of Brahmā. For the self-articulation and its effects through Yoga or Jhāna,¹ the popular simile was that of a clever potter making pots of any shape out of properly prepared clay².

¹ Majjhīma, i, p. 160f.

² Rhys Davids, Dialogues of the Buddha, S.B.B., ii, p. 208f.

Thus the Yoga practice and miracle went together. In popular estimation the greater the psychic power, the superior was the Master. Just as the wrestlers in an arena measured their strength with each other, so did the ascetics, and the contest was eagerly witnessed by the people. The Sāvatti miracle performed by the Buddha was intended to establish his superiority over the rest of the competitors in the field of psychic power. The question with the people who thronged to witness the performance was—who is the greater Yogī, the Buddha or the Tittihas?³ The Ājivikas claimed their third Tittthāṅkara, Gośāla, as one of the three greatest Avadhūtas in history⁴. The Jainas proclaimed that their last Tittthāṅkara, Mahāvīra, was the all-knowing and all-seeing Master, possessed of an infinite knowledge⁵. They further declared that in all postures of his body, the supreme knowledge and vision (ñāṇadassanam) were always present with him. Similarly the

¹ Keith, Buddhist Philosophy, pp. 30, 42, 43, 90, 119, etc.; Law, Concepts of Buddhism, Chap. VI.

² Dīgha, i, p. 78f.; Dial. B., op. cit., p. 88f.

³ Jātaka, iv, p. 264f.; Mahāvastu, iii, p. 115.

⁴ Anguttara, iii, p. 384; Sumaṅgalavilāsinī, i, p. 162.

⁵ Majjhima, i, p. 92f.; Law, Mahāvīra, p. 43.

Buddhists contended for the superiority of their Master over all by the fact of his experience of the highest state of consciousness through the ninth samāpatti called *saññā-vedayita-nirodha*¹. Among the Buddha's immediate disciples, Moggallāna was claimed to have occupied the foremost rank in respect of the possession of psychic power².

The man gifted with psychic power passed also as the man of wisdom, the greatest Yogī figuring sometimes as the greatest rationalist. The Sāmaṇa-Brāhmaṇa period was indeed a period during which the religious experiences were sought to be rationalised. So we need not be astonished at all that the bands of the wandering ascetics, Paribbājakas and Sāmaṇas, appeared in the scene as great controversialists and disputants. The royal parks and gardens of the aristocrats were their halting places where they engaged themselves in serious discussions. The philosophical contest was no less an interesting occasion for the people than the miracle. Sometimes they talked so loudly that the place where they halted or resided became very much noisy like a fish market³. We hear of a Tindukacīra or Tindukā garden which resounded with the uproar of doctrines (samaya-pavāḍaka)¹. To provide them with a fixed residence during the rains, their lay supporters, kings, queens, princes, courtiers and bankers, permanently dedicated the ārāmas to this or that particular order of Paribbājakas and Samanas. The result was that the ārāmas gradually became known as Paribbājaka-ārāmas, or converted into viḥāras or monastic establishments. The mountain caves where they used to seek shelter during the rains, were likewise turned into leṇas or cave-dwellings.

¹ Majjhima, i, p. 296.

² Anguttara, i, p. 23; Majjhima, i, p. 251f.; E. J. Thomas, History of Buddhist Thought, p. 52.

³ Majjhima, ii, Sakuludāyī Sutta, (Mahā and Cūḷa).

The Śaravana² near Śrāvastī was the place where the Ājīvika leader, Maṣkari Gōśāla, was born of Parivrajaka parents. The Jetavana³, on the south side of Sāvattihī was originally a private garden of Prince Jeta, which was subsequently converted into a viḥāra by the banker, Anāthapiṇḍika, for the Buddha and his disciples. The Pubbārāma⁴ or the garden on the east side of the city was similarly converted into a viḥāra by Viśākhā, daughter-in-law of the banker, Migāra, and offered as

¹ This was the famous garden of queen Mallikā in the suburb of Sāvattihī, provided at first with one shed and subsequently with many sheds to make accommodations for the wandering ascetics or recluses. Dīgha, I, p. 178

² B. C. Law, Śrāvastī in Indian Literature (Memoir A.S.I., No. 50), p. 10.

³ Ibid, p. 10

⁴ Ibid, pp. 10, 22-25,

a gift to the Buddhist Saṅgha of all times and all quarters. The Sahassambavana¹ outside the city of Palāsapura became a Jaina residence during Mahāvīra's lifetime. The garden of the Śākya Nyagrodha near the city of Kapilavasthu was transformed into a vihāra and offered as a gift to the Buddha and his followers. The same as to the Mahāvana² near Vésālī and the Veluvana³ and Jivaka's Mango-grove⁴ near Rājagaha. A retreat for the Paribbājakas was built on the landed estate of Udumbarikādevī, not far from Rājagaha. Pāvārika's Mango-grove at Nālandā and the Gaggarā tank at Campā, the capital of Aṅga, were famous as halting places of the wandering ascotics and recluses; the places or sites that were attractive to this class of Indian religieux may be easily inferred from the two famous utterances of the Buddha, cited below:

First, the Buddha, at the first sight of Uruvelā, observed: 'Pleasantly picturesque is this part of land. Delightful is the sight of grassy woodland. The river (Nerañjarā) is flowing on in a glassy stream showing the bathing places with gradual descent of steps presenting a charming landscape, and affording glimpses into

¹ Uvāsagadasāo, ed. by Hoernle, Chaps. IV-VII.

² Law, Some Kṣatriya Tribes of Ancient India, p. 46f.

³ Law, Rājagriha in Ancient Literature, pp. 11-12.

⁴ Ibid., pp. 12-13.

the neighbouring hamlets, easy of access. 'This must be the fitting place for the scion of a noble race strenuously striving after the highest attainment¹.'

Secondly, the Buddha's happy reminiscences of the sites at Rājagaha are vividly recorded thus in the Mahāparinibbāna Suttanta: 'Delightful' is Rājagaha, delightful is the Gijjhakūṭa mountain, delightful is the Gotama Nigrodha, delightful is the Corapapāta, the Sattapaṇṇiguḥā on a side of the Vebhāra mountain, the Sappaṇḍika-slope in Sitavana, the Tapodārāma, the Veḷuvana Kalandaka-nivāpa, the Mango-grove of Jīvaka, and the Maddakuṭchi Deer Park.

There verily I dwelt at Rājagaha in the Sattapaṇṇa cave on one side of the Vebhāra mountain. There verily I dwelt at Rājagaha on Kālasilā on a side of the Isigili mountain'. So on and so forth².

It may be noted that the Kālasilā was the very rock on which the Jaina recluses could be seen practising austerity in a standing posture from dawn to dusk³.

¹ Majjhima, i, pp. 166-167; Mahāvastu, ii, p. 123f.; Lalitavistara (Mitra's ed.), p. 311; Barua, Gayā and Buddhagayā, pp. 103, 162.

² Dīgha, ii, p. 116f.; Law, Rājagriha in Ancient Literature (Memor. A.S.L., No. 58), p. 7f. The Theravāṇāpāṇā contains similar reminiscences.

³ Majjhima, i, p. 92.

In the opinion of D. R. Bhandarkar, the ancient ṛṣis were not aggressive propagators of their faith¹. As distinguished from them, the Paribbājakas and Samaṇas actively propagated the same amongst all classes of people. The happy result of it was that already by the time of Piyadasi-Asoka almost the whole of India was Aryanised or Hinduised by them, the Saṃmaṇas and the Brāhmaṇas². They were the people who prepared the ground for the vigorous Buddhist missionary work, organised during the latter part of the reign of Aśoka. Before that time the spread of Buddhism was restricted more or less to the confines of Majjhimadesa³. And yet the missionary zeal which enabled Buddhism to become a great civilising influence in the world, lay in the epoch-making utterance of the Buddha with which he urged his very first batch of advanced disciples to go forth in all directions and preach the new message of the Dhamma, not two of them following the same direction, for the good and happiness of many, himself taking the lead in the matter⁴.

In carrying on this noble mission, some of the hermits, ascetics and recluses had to play the

¹ Bhandarkar, Carmichael Lectures, 1918, p. 17.

² Asoka's R.E., xiii; Barua, Gayā and Buddhagayā, i, p. 262.

³ Kathāvatthu, i, 3; I.H.Q., vii (1931), p. 368.

⁴ Vinaya Mahāvagga: 'Caratha, bhikkhave, cārikaṃ bahujanahitāya • bahujanasukhāya', etc.

rôle of martyrs. The Jātakas and Kauṭilya's Arthasāstra record just a few typical instances of martyrdom suffered in the past. Ajjuna, king of the Kekayas, caused annoyance to the sage, Gotama. Daṇḍakī, king of Daṇḍaka, insulted Kisavaccha, the guileless ascetic. King Mejjha ill-treated Mātanga, the far-famed sage. The Andhaka-Venhu youths of Dvāravatī roughly handled Kaṇha-Dipāyana and ultimately put him to death. Kalābu, king of Benares, tortured an ascetic who was a preacher of patience and forbearance. Nāḷikira (or Nāḷikera), king of Kalinga, cut the body of an ascetic into pieces and offered his limbs to dogs to devour. In one instance, a king pierced a harmless ascetic with an arrow under the misapprehension that he stood in his way as ill-luck and spoiled his game. Even in historical times, the Buddha's great disciple and powerful popular preacher, Moggallāna, was surrounded and killed by brigands (alleged to have been employed by his rivals in other sects).

There were two effective ways of checking the tyrants and sinners: the pronouncement of a curse and the invention of the stories of terrible sufferings in different purgatories. But the Indian ascetics also invented the stories of a happy and glorious life in different heavens to induce the people to lead a moral and pious life.' The early Jaina and Buddhist texts are full of vivid pictures of purgatories and paradises. According to the Rāmāyaṇa, in order to prevent disturbances to the sacrifices in the āśramas, caused by the aboriginal tribes, the hermits and sages had to seek occasionally the aid of the princes and warriors for an armed protection. But left to themselves and determined to remain non-violent and non-harming, they had to make patience, forbearance, etc., a virtue of necessity.

The account of Mahāvīra's early wanderings in the country of Lāḍha in the Ācārāṅga Sūtra shows that the rude inhabitants of the place used to set dogs with the cry of chucchū upon the ascetics when they were found near their localities¹. But as borne out by the reminiscences of Mahāvīra and the Buddha, the mischief-makers whom the lonely ascetics had to reckon with were the cowherds (gopālakā) who made practical jokes on them².

The doctrinal basis of various stories of heaven and hell was the widely current popular belief in paraloka or life hereafter. The doctrine of Karma was founded on this very belief. So much stress was laid upon the betterment of human existence in the life to come that the general impression among the people of the Buddha's time was that religion was needed for furthering the worldly interest only. It was from this impression that king Ajātasattu of Magadha was led to have interviews with the contemporary religious teachers for enlightenment on the question as to the possibility of the immediate fruit of religious life in the present existence. In the Sāmaññaphala and other suttas, we read that the contemporary religious teachers whom he waited upon gave answers that were not to the point. He then saw the Buddha who satisfied him with a relevant answer. The Buddha's arguments went to establish that religion, if rightly and earnestly practised, was of immense service to men and women in the present world, its primary function being to improve the personal, family, social, economic, moral, intellectual and spiritual status of them by showing them the path of deliverance from bondage in all its degrees and forms.¹

¹ Ācārāṅga Sūtra, i, 8.3-4.

² Ibid., 18.3-10; Mahāsīhanāda Sutta, Majjhima, i, p. 79.

In corroboration of the drift of the Buddha's reply, we may note that Indian religions of the age encouraged various works of social piety, e.g., construction of roads and bridges, planting of shade trees, excavation of tanks, digging of wells, laying out of fruit gardens, supply of drinking water at suitable places for the thirsty, travellers and beasts, opening of charity halls, supply of medicinal roots, fruits, leaves and herbs, maintenance of public granaries and storehouses as provisions against famine and starvation, etc. The voice was raised against the servitude of men and women, the slave-trade was prohibited among the followers and the manumission of slaves was encouraged. The religious orders of the Sāmaṇas admitted even the slaves and Suddas into their fold and proved that given a chance, a barber like Upāli could occupy a foremost rank among the elect.

The door of higher religious life was also kept open to the women of all social grades and ranks, nay, even to the fallen women, some of whom made their mark in history by their changed life.

By preaching the doctrine of Ahiṃsā, the religions brought about a change in the art of cooking and items of food. They persistently sought to create a social order based on cordiality, fellow-feeling and love. The vigorous religious propaganda carried on during the period went to mitigate and humanise the most rigorous and barbarous laws¹. The religions served to improve the moral tone and taste of society. The Buddhist Vinaya co-

¹ Majjhima, i, p. 87.

sin.

INDEX

- Abbhutadhammas, 270
 Abhaya, prince, 167
 Abhidhamma, 267 Abhijātas (grades of spiritual advancement), 230
 Acoṭapadi, 199
 Acelakas, 222, 223, 226, 227,
 232
 Aciravati, 6, 11, 23, 26, 46, 132 Acrobata, 177, 179
 lectors, professional, 179
 Acyutapada, 231
 Adhariyas, 201, 253
 Ahicchatra, 37
 Ahikakkā, 22
 Ahipati (issara), 169
 Ahogaṅga, 39
 Aśvātmaśāstra, 255, 256
 Iranian, 17, latantia, 259
 hakkāra (officer fixing prices of commodities), 259
 Ahirapura, 39
 Aggideva, 101 Aggihutta (oblations to fire), 206
 Agnates, 146, 147 culture, 154, 177
 culturists (kassakā), 159
 Ahavvaṇaveda, 245
 Ahetuvādā, 110
 Ahicchatra, 37, 38, 97
 Ahimsā, doctrine of, 242
 Ahivātakaroga, 173
 Ahogaṅga, 39
 Aitareyas, 201
 Aiyangar, S. K., 78
 Ajapatha, 71
 Ajātasattu, 123, 124, 136,
 136, 137, 138, 159, 166,
 241
 Ajita Kesakambali, 223, 225, 274
 Ajitavati, 25
 Ajjuna, 95, 96, 99, 101, 196, 239
 Akiriyaśāstra, 110
 Akkhānam (ballad recitation), 261
 Akkharappabheda, 247, 24
 Akkharikā (game of guessin-at letters), 277
 Alaka, 78, 108
 Alākakālāma, see Ālāka kālāma.
 Alasanda, 68, 69, 83
 Alberuni, 15
 Alexandria, 83
 Allahabad, 23
 Allakappa, 34, 57, 128, 134
 Alms Houses, 171
 Amarakaṇṭaka hills, 79

- Amarakoṣa, 81
 Amarāvati, 78
 Amarāvikkhepaka, 225
 Ambagāma, 53
 Ambalaṭṭhikā, 49
 Ambapālī, 167, 272
 Ambassadors, 155
 Ambaṭṭhas, 150
 Anāthapiṇḍika, 175, 176, 235
 Anatomy, 260
 Anāvṛṣṭi, 172
 Āṇḍhaka, 108, 114, 271
 Andhakas, 86, 103, 113, 114, 115, 142
 Andhakaveṇhu, 103, 239
 Andhakaviṣṇu, 101
 Āṇḍhaka-Vṛṣṇa, 95, 103
 Andhapura, 79, 114
 Andhra, 108, 115
 Andhrā, 113
 Aṅga, 19, 20, 24, 32, 33, 34, 50, 117, 119, 120, 121, 130, 135, 165, 220, 236, 282
 Aṅgā, 117
 Aṅga-Magadha, 70, 120
 Aṅgas, 117, 118, 247, 267
 Aṅgiraśa, 147
 Aṅgulimāla, 272
 Aṅgutaṛāpa, 50
 Aṅkatṭhā (sentinels), 178
 Añjanaḍḍevī, 102
 Añjanapabbata, 6
 Añjanavana, 31
 Aṅkura, 101
 Ānabbhāra, 223
 Anomā, 24, 54
 Anotatta lake, 5, 10, 11, 63
 Antaravedī, 20
 Antarāpaṇas (godowns), 189
 Antarikkhacarā (those in the firmament), 198, 199
 Antevāsīs (resident pupils), 237
 Anupiyā, 54
 Anuvindakas, 109
 Anuvyākhyānas (glosses), 250
 Anuvyañjanas, 266
 Aparagayā, 48
 Aparagodāna, 2, 9
 Aparagoyāna, 2
 Aparānta, 2, 16, 18, 67, 73, 106
 Aparāntakas, 111
 Aparasela, 78, 114
 Apothecaries, 151
 Appāṇakajhānas, 232
 Appraisers, 152
 Arabian Sea, 4, 67
 Arakan Coast, 188
 Arantuka, 36
 Archers, 159
 Archery, 159, 253
 Architects, 152, 155, 179
 Ardhamāgadhi, 225, 264, 265
 Arindama, 121
 Arithmetic (ganikā, rāsī, saṃkhāna), 245, 248, 250
 Arrow-makers (oṣṭapakārā), 178, 179
 Ārthasāstra (science of polity), 249

- Artists (rūpadakkhā), 178
 Aruṇa, king, 108, 116
 Arūpabrahmas, 199
 Aryandom, 215
 Aryans, 139
 Ascetics, six grades of:
 Ātura, 230
 Bahūdakā, 230, 231
 Īkṣṇā, 230, 231
 Kuṭībratā (Kuṭīcakā),
 230, 231
 Paramahamṣā, 230, 231
 Turiyāṭṭitaparamahamṣa,
 231
 Asi, 42
 Asikni, 98
 Asitañjana, 100
 Āsmakas, 107,
 Āśoka, 15, 76, 78, 82, 106,
 112, 113, 114, 115, 116,
 119, 238
 Assaka, 19, 34, 108, 114, 116, 130
 Assakaṇṇa, 2
 Assakas, 107
 Assakenus, 107
 Assamukha, 10
 Assapura, 50, 120
 Aṣṭaka, ṛṣi, 252
 Astrologers, 152
 Astrology, 246, 247, 249,
 250, 266
 Astronomers, 155
 Astronomy, 246, 247, 249,
 250, 266
 Asurabhavana, 2
 Asuras, 200, 201
 Āśvaghoṣa, 272
 Āśvakas, 107
 Āśvamedha (horse-sacrifice),
 205 Ātavicoṛā (criminal tribes living in forests), 173
 Athabhaṇaveda, 247
 Atharvaṇaveda, 245, 250
 Atharvāṅgirasas, 250, 251
 Atharvaveda, 247
 Attā (soul), 224
 Atthaka, country, 106
 Atthaka, king, 106
 Atthaka, ṛṣi, 147, 252
 Atthakulā, 123
 Atthakulakā, 123
 Atthakulikā, 172 Atthidhopana (washing the bones of the dead), 193
 Avadhūta, 231
 Avanti, 19, 22, 34, 74, 101
 104, 105, 120, 134, 135
 138
 Avantis, 103, 104, 105, 107
 108
 Aviruddhakas, 198
 Aviwa, 32
 Ayodhyā, 23, 43, 100, 131
 132, 215, 219
 Ayojjhā, 100, 131, 132
 Ābhassaraloka, 231
 Ācāradaśā, 268
 Ādiccabandhu, 127
 Ādipurusa, 122
 Ādityas, 146
 Ādrakalpa, 34, 57

- āgama, 256, 257, 260, 264, 267
 Ājivikas, 198, 200, 226, 227, 230, 231, 232, 233, 260, 265, 266
 Ākāsagaṅgā, 11
 Ākāsattḥā, 198, 199
 Ālabhi, 32, 43
 Ālāhana, 193
 Ālārakālāma, 232, 234
 Ālavaka, 58
 Ālavī, 32, 58, 135
 Āñakasusāna, 193
 Āndhras, 113, 114
 Andhrakas, 113
 Āngeyas, 117
 Āpanas (shops), 189
 Āpastamba, 268
 Āryāvarta, 5, 12
 Āśā (Hope), 204
 Āśāḥasena, 37
 Ātura, 230
 Āvattagaṅgā, 11
 Āyurveda, 249, 259, 260

 Babbara, 68, 71, 72, 86
 Babylonia, 185
 Bactrian Greeks, 83, 84, 101
 Bahalagaṅgā, 11
 Bahūdakā, 230
 Bāhukā, 22
 Bāhumatī, 22
 Bāhyroas, 201
 Bairāt, 76
 Baladeva, 101, 198
 Bālakalapakāra, 39, 41
 Ballad-reciters, 152, 155, 179
 Bandhupādāpaccā, 145
 Baṅga, vide Vaṅga.
 Bankers, 175
 Banking facilities, 191
 Barbara, 67, 84, 86
 Barbers, 141, 177, 178
 Bārāṇasī, 21, 24, 34, 129
 Barbaricum, 72
 Bareilly Dist., 37
 Bārhadrathapura, 119
 Bārhadrathas, 120
 Baruṇā, 42
 Barygaza, 76, 112
 Basket-makers (nalakārā), 178, 179
 Baskets (piṭakas), 267
 Bath-attendants, 177, 178
 Bathers (malamañjanasamā), 151
 Baudhāyana, 20
 Bāvari, the chaplain, 157, 158, 218, 219, 233
 Bāvharījas, 201, 253
 Bay of Bengal, 4
 Beef-eating, 211
 Beggars, 177
 Belatṭha clan, 224, 225
 Belatṭha family, 224
 Benares, 112, 123, 129, 130, 159, 185, 188, 216, 217, 219, 239, 279, 281
 Berar, 106
 Berbai, 188
 Besarh, 52
 Besnagar, 84
 Besyngeitai, 188
 Bhaddāsana, 209

- Bhaddiya, 50
 Bhadrāsana, 209
 Bhadrāsva, 9
 Bhagalpur, 50
 Bhagavānpur, 56
 Bhagga, 133
 Bhagga-Kārūsas, 109
 Bhaggas, 32, 34, 39, 110, 124, 134
 Bhaggavagotta, 222
 Bhāgīrathī, 23, 37, 73
 Bhāgīrathī-Gangā, 23, 35
 Bhagu, 147, 252
 Bhakti, 195, 203
 Bhalluka, 109
 Bhandarkar, D. R., 104, 131, 238
 Bhāradvāja, 147, 252
 Bharahavāsa, 1
 Bharata, 14, 104, 118, 129, 215
 Bhāratavarṣa, 3, 4, 8, 9, 13, 14, 121, 215
 Bhārgava family, 223
 Bhārgavas, 117
 Bharu, 111
 Bhārūkaccha, 111, 112, 187
 Bhāsamaggam, 248
 Bhatiya, king, 120, 165
 Bhaṭṭiya, 119, 120
 Bhavanavāsī, 199, 200
 Bhesakalāvana, 32, 33
 Bhilla, 141
 Bhilsā, 26, 75, 109
 Bhīma, king, 87, 106, 215
 Bhīmaratha, king, 106
 Bhiru, 111
 Bhirūkaccha, 111
 Bhoganagara, 53
 Bhoja, 73, 106
 Bhojaputtas, sixteen, 105, 107
 Bhojakas, 106, 173
 Bhopal, 26, 75
 Bhr̥gu, 252
 Bhr̥gukaccha, 74, 76, 111
 Bhummas (terrestrial), 198, 199
 Bhūrloka, 231
 Bhūtagana Mt., 63
 Bhūtavidyā, 250
 Bhūvarloka, 231
 Bias, 69
 Bihar, 49, 61
 Bihar-Sarif-Nawadah, 49
 Bimbisāra, 49, 87, 111, 119, 120, 123, 135, 136, 161, 165, 167, 280
 Bindusāra lake, 10, 12
 Biology, 260
 Bird-catching, 182
 Birdpur Estate, 56
 Birds, different species, 66, 183
 Blacksmiths, 141, 178, 179
 Bloch, J., 47
 Bodhāyana, 268
 Bodhi, prince, 110
 Bogra, 60
 Bones, Washing the, 193
 Botany, 260
 Bouting, 171
 Bow-makers (usukārā), 178, 179

- Bowmen 178
 Brahmā, 145, 197, 199, 203, 232
 Brahmanbandhu (Brahmā's favourite), 163
 Brahmadatta, 98, 108, 118, 119, 120, 129, 130, 131
 Brahmaloaka, 231
 Brāhmaṇa-candālā, 152
 Brāhmaṇa-mahāsālas, 161, 175
 Brāhmaṇa Parivrājakas, 230
 Brāhmaṇas, 139, 142, 148, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 158, 161, 162, 163, 174, 178, 180, 201, 213, 231, 238
 Brahmaputra, 64
 Brahmarśideśa, 21
 Brahmarśis, 216
 Brahmāvarta, 67
 Brahmanvidyā, 250
 Brahmanvihāras, four, 218
 Karunā, 218
 Mettā, 218
 Muditā, 218
 Upekkhā, 218
 Brahmayoni hill, 26, 47
 Brāhadratha, 119, 121
 Bridges, construction of, 171
 Broach, 111
 Buddha, 120, 121, 125, 126, 127, 128, 131, 132, 136, 137, 138, 152, 212, 213, 220, 225, 233, 235, 236, 238, 239, 241
 Buddhadatta, 77, 114
 Buddhaghosa, 33, 36, 57, 93, 114, 115, 147, 175, 230, 231
 Buddhakhottha, 289
 Buddhasāsanam, 246
 Buffalo-fights, 171
 Bulis, 34, 128, 134
 Bull-fights, 171
 Bundelkhand, 40
 Burglars (sandhichedakā), 172
 Burma, 187
 Butchers (goghātakas), 151
 Cakkavatti (overlord), 15, 121, 169
 Calendar-makers, 152
 Candapannatti, 274
 Cammakārā (leather-workers), 140, 178
 Cammasātakas, 222
 Camoje, 85
 Campā, 21, 24, 34, 47, 50, 118, 119, 161, 185, 236
 Cāpakya, 159
 Cañcu, a kind of famine, 172
 Candabhāgā, 6, 70, 73
 Candadeva, 101
 Candagutta, 128, 172
 Candāla-haddipau, 141
 Candālas, 140, 141, 193
 Candapajjota, 104, 105, 120, 135, 166, 168
 Candragupta, 159
 Cāñki, 161

- Cāpakārā (arrow-makers),
 " 178
 Cape Comorin, 187
 Caravan merchants, 70, 184
 Carpenters (tacchakā), 160,
 178, 179
 Carriage-builders, 179,
 Caste system, 192
 Castor, 182
 Cattle, 224
 Cattle-breeders, 152
 Cattle-breeding, 154
 Cātubbedā (four vadas),
 248
 Cātumā, 55
 Cātuyāmasamvara, 225
 Caumojee, 85
 Cavalry, 171
 Cave-dwellings (lenas), 235
 Caves, 222
 Cedi, 116, 120, 121, 216
 Cedis, 129, 133, 134
 Cellanā, 123
 Ceṭaka, 123, 136
 Cetaṭuttā, 133
 Cetirattha, 40
 Ceti, 116, 120, 133
 Chaddanta lake, 5, 65
 Chanda (metre), 245, 265
 Chandasā (prosody), 249, 263
 Chandāvas, 201, 253
 Chāndogyas, 201
 Chāndokas, 201, 253
 Chariot-drivers, 155, 178
 " Charioteers, 171
 Charsada, 72
 Chathāgiri, 28
 Chatravatī, 87
 Chattapatha, 71
 Chavaachaddhakā (corpsethrowers), 140
 Chenab, 73, 98
 Cheras, 115
 Chicacole, 79, 115
 China, 177
 Chotanagpur hills, 59
 Chryse Chora, 188
 Cīnarattha, 178, 188
 Cīnas, 86
 Girātas, 85
 Cis-Sutlej States, 17
 Citā (funeral pyre), 193
 Agnidagdā, 193
 Anagnidagdā, 193
 Citrakūṭa, 12, 64
 Citta, 175
 Cleisobora, 103
 Clerks (rūpadakkhā), 178
 Cloth merchants (dussikā),
 178, 179
 Cock-fights, 171
 Cognates, 146
 Coins, 190
 Aḍḍhakahāpana, 190
 Aḍḍhamāsaka, 190
 Aḍḍhapāda, 190
 Chief medium of exchange, 190
 Copper, 190
 " Gold, 190
 Kahāpana, 159, 190, 192
 " Kākanika, 190
 Māsaka, 190

- Pāda, 190
 Rikkha, 190
 Silver, 190
 Suvaṇṇa, 190
 Coḷa country, 114
 Coḷas, 113, 115
 Collectors of alms, 152
 Comb-makers, 179
 Comets, 200, 263
 Commensality, 145
 Commerce, 177
 Conjeeveram, 78
 Cōnnubium, 145
 Conveyancing (muddā), 249
 Cooks (sūpikā), 177, 178
 Cora, different kinds of, 172
 Corajetṭha (ring-leader), 173
 Corapapāta, 48, 173, 237
 Coromandel Coast, 78
 Corpse-burners, 179
 Corpse-throwers, 140
 Cotton, 182
 Council, First Buddhist, 138
 • Second Buddhist, 138
 Valabhi, 267
 Courtesans, 166, 167, 168, 179, 192
 Cowherds (gopālakā), 141, 240
 Cow-killing, 211
 Cowry Shells (sippikāni), 190
 Craftsmen (sippikā), 151
 Criminal justice, 171
 Criminal tribes, 173
 Cūḷani Brahmadaṭṭa, king, 98
 Culla-Himavanta, 4
 Cullakāḷiṅga, 116
 Cundadvolā, 48
 Cundaṭṭhila, 42
 Cundavīla, 42
 Cutch, 74, 111
 Daddarapura, 120
 Dadhivāhana, 118
 Daivāvṛdhas, 103
 Dakkhinākosala, 44
 Dakkhinagiri, 49, 159
 Dakkhinamadhurā, 113
 Dakkhinapaññoḷa vide Dakṣiṇapaññoḷa.
 Dakkhināpatha, 73, 77, 104, 107, 115, 184
 Dakṣiṇapaññoḷa, 97
 Dakṣiṇātya, 5, 12, 16, 18
 Dālbhyas, 58
 Dalkisor, 59
 Damiḷa, 78, 271
 Damiḷaratṭha, 114
 Damiḷas, 86, 113, 115
 Dancers, 179
 Dancing girls, 177, 179
 Daṇḍaka, 106, 239
 Daṇḍakī, king, 106, 116, 239
 Dāṇḍakya, 106
 Dantapura, 79, 115, 116
 Dappana, 209
 Darada, 67
 Dārakatikicchā, 259
 Darbhanga District, 53
 Daripatha, 71

- Darius, king, 87
 Darpaṇa, 209
 Dasan, 109
 Dasaṇṇa country, 109
 Dasaṇṇā, river, 109
 Dasaṇṇas, 109
 Daśaratha, 132
 Daśārṇa, 215
 Daśārṇabhadra, 215
 Dead, disposal of the:
 ājāhana, 193
 āmakasusāna, 193
 sivathikā, 193
 Deccan, 115
 Deer Park, 42
 Desaka, 51, 60
 Despised classes, five, 140
 Devadaha, 55
 Devadhammikas, 195
 Devagabbhā, 100, 102, 164
 Devakī, 100, 102
 Devas, three classes:
 Sammutidevā, 197
 Upapattidevā, 197
 Visuddhidevā, 197
 Devasabhā, 73, 74
 Dēvavatikas, 195
 Devavidyā (etymology), 250
 Devayajanavidyā, 250
 Dhamma, 194, 238, 267
 Dhammakathikas, 286
 Dhammanāṭaka, 167
 Dhammasenāpatīs, 212
 Dhammāsoka, 138
 Dhanabhūti, 168
 Dhanakaṭaka, 78
 Dhanañjaya Koravya, 99,
 146
 Dhanañjaya Setṭhi, 176
 Dhanapālagāma, 42 Dhanurveda (military or archery science), 249, 258
 Dhanuṣkoṭi, 13
 Dhataratṭha, 118, 129, 200, 240
 Dhruvamadhyamādik, 38
 Digha-kārāyaṇa, 137, 169, 261
 Dighanakha, 223
 Disākākā (flight of crows),
 187 Disākumāras (quarter-gods), 200
 Disampati, 157
 Discipline, 267
 Doṇa, 23
 Door-keepers (dovārikā), 178
 Dowry, 176
 Drama (pekkhā), 171
 Drain cleaners (saṇḍhikā),
 178
 Draupadī, 95
 Drāviḍā, 113
 Dream portents (supinam), 248
 Droṇastūpa, 57
 Dṛṣadvatī, 36
 Dṛṣṭivāda, 267
 Druggists, 151, 155
 Drugs, 188
 Druhyas, 86
 Drupada, 168

- Duels, 171
 Dukkarakārikā, a form of penance, 231
 Dummukha, king, 87, 97, 122, 215
 Dussikā (cloth merchants), 178, 179
 Dūtas, 155
 Duties, exemption from the payment of, 174
 Duiyodhana, 121
 Dvārakā, 85, 102
 Dvāravātī, 102, 132, 167, 215, 239
 Dvārikeśvarī, 59
 Dyers (rajakārā), 178, 179
 Dynastic list of the kings in the Purāṇas, 138

 Earthquakes, forecasts of, 248
 Eastern Turkistan, 88
 Economic conditions, 139 et seq.
 Edicts of Aśoka, 113
 Ekadandikas, 202
 Ekanālā, 49, 159
 Ekapadikamaga, 219
 Ekasālakatinduka, 46
 Ekasāṭakas (one-garment men), 222
 Ekāyana (Path of purity), 250
 Elephant, four kinds of, 65
 Elephant riders (haṭṭhā-rohā), 178
 Elephant trainers (haṭṭhi-pālā), 178, 180
 Emblems, eight, 208
 Embryology, 260
 Epidemics, 173
 Erakaccha, 109
 Etiquette, laws of, 243
 Etymology, 250
 Exchange, medium of, 190
 Exegesis (niruttā), 246, 262
 Exorcism, 252

 Famine, three kinds of:
 Caricu, 172
 Śalākāvṛtti, 172
 Svetāsthī, 172
 Farmers, 152, 155, 160, 170
 Farokhabad Dist., 37
 Fences, 181
 Festive sowing (mangala vappa), 159
 Fibre crops, 182
 Fick, Richard, 151, 164
 Fighters, 178
 Fighting units, 178
 Fine arts, 250
 Fishermen, 141
 Fodder-suppliers, 179
 Foot-soldiers, 178
 Fortune-tellers, 151
 Fowlers, 140
 Fuel-suppliers (kaṭṭhahārā), 178, 179

 Gaggarā tank, 50, 236
 Gahapati, 174, 175, 177, 213
 Gahapati-mahāsālas, 175

- Gāmabhojaka (village headman), 183 Gāmaghātācorā (plunderers of villages), 172 Gāmākhettas (cultivable lands), 181
 Game :
 Akkharikā, 277
 Gaṇadhāras, 211
 Gaṇarājās, 135
 Gaṇḍak, 25, 54
 Gaṇḍakī, 46
 Gandhabbā (music), 248 Gandhabbaveda (science of music), 260
 Gandhamādana, 9, 12, 62, 82
 Gandhapura, 48
 Gandhāra, 19, 67, 83, 86,
 97, 109, 116, 120, 122,
 185, 215, 280
 Gandhāra-viśaya, 72 Gandharvaveda (science of music), 249
 Gandhikā (perfumers), 178
 Gaṅgā, 6, 8, 10, 11, 12, 17, 73, 185
 Ganges, 37, 100, 121, 122,
 129, 135, 136, 214, 229
 Gangetic Valley, 34
 Gaṇikā (prostitutes), 168,
 176, 192
 Gaṇivijjā (Arithmetic), 274
 Gayā, 22, 46, 220, 221
 Gayā, river, 220
 Gayākhetta, 119, 206, 220
 Gayāsīra, 26, 47, 48
 Gayāsīsa, 26
 Generals, 155
 Geology, 260
 Geyya, 269
 Ghanasalapabbata, 75
 Ghatapaṇḍita, 101
 Ghogrā, 25
 Ghosaka, 166
 Ghositārāma, 39
 Ghoṭamukha, 261
 Gihīvinaya (gṛhīvinaya),
 268
 Gijjhakūṭa, 27, 28, 237
 Ginger, dry, 182
 Giribbaja, 48, 120
 Giriyeḷ, 29
 Gītāmārga, 262, 265
 Godāvarī, 77, 107, 108, 113, 218, 219, 283
 Goghātakas (butchers), 161
 Gomāṭa-Kandarā, 31
 Gonaddha, 74
 Gopa-nāpitam, 141
 Gopas, 151
 Goradhagiri, 27
 Gorakhpur, 25
 Gorathagiri, 27, 47
 Gośāla, 224, 230, 233, 260
 Gotama mountain, 63
 Gotama-gotta, 146
 Gotta, 146, 147, 222
 Gotama, 146
 Kaphāyana, 146
 Vāseṭṭha, 125, 146
 Yuddhitthila, 146
 Govaddhana, 100
 Government, form of :
 Monarchical, 163

- Oligarchical, 124, 163
 Republican, 124, 163
 Tribal, 163
 Govinda, 123, 157
 Graces, four Indian, 204
 Grammar (Vyākaraṇa), 245, 247, 263, 264
 Granaries, public, 171, 242
 Grass-cutters, 179
 Gṛdhrakūṭa, vide Gijjhakūṭa.
 Gṛhīvinaya, 268
 Guilds (pugas), 142, 179
 Gwālior, 114
 Haddipas, 141
 Haihayas, 104, 105
 Haimavatapati, 12
 Haimavatavarṣa, 80
 Hālidhikāni, 175
 Halla, 135
 Hamsā, 230
 Harikāntā, 10
 Harikāntānadisuri, 12
 Harisena, 215
 Harivarṣa, 3, 9, 62
 Hastināpura, 35, 94, 97, 133, 215
 Haṭhayoga, 232, 255
 Hatthārohā (elephant riders), 178
 Hatthipālā (elephant trainers), 178
 Hatthipura, 120
 Hazaribagh, 48
 Helmet-wearers, 178
 Hemakūṭaparvata, 3, 9, 63
 Hermits, 215, 216, 217
 Hierarchy, 199, 200, 201
 Highway robbers (pantha-ghāṭacorā), 172
 Himācala, 5
 Himalaya, 5, 8, 123
 Himavanta, 5, 63
 Hinajātis, five, 140
 Hinasippas (low trades), 140
 Hingulapabbata, 6
 Hingulatala, 6
 Hiraññavati, 25
 Hiranyaśrīga, 10
 Homa, 206
 Hopkins, 72, 202
 Horse-sacrifice (aśvamedha), 205
 Horses of diverse breeds, 65
 Hotel keepers, 178
 Household servants (pes-sikā), 178
 Human-sacrifice (purisa-medha), 205
 Hunters (luddakasamā), 140, 151
 Hyderabad, 18
 Hydraotes, 69, 92
 Hyphasis, 92
 Iochānaṅgala, 45
 Iochānaṅkala, 161
 Ikshvāku, 122, 125
 Ilāvṛtavarṣa, 3, 62
 Inda, 197, 201, 203
 Indakūṭa, 29
 Indapatta, 35, 93, 94, 99
 Indasālaguhā, 29, 30

- Indian ocean, 187
 Indraprastha, 35
 Indus, 70
 Infant healing, 259
 Inscription—
 Barābar Hill-cave, 27
 Barhut, 57
 Barhut gateway, 168
 Behistun, of Darius, 87
 Besnāgar Garuḍa Pillar, 84
 Brāhmī, 60
 Hāthigumphā, 27, 44, 106, 115
 Junāgaḍh Rock, 84, 112
 Nāgārjunikoṇḍa, 79, 85
 Ionia, 83, 187
 Irāvātī, 69
 Irubbedā, 247
 Īsadhara, 2
 Īśāna, 203
 Isidāsi, 272
 Isigili Mt., 27, 237
 Isipabbajjā, 213, 217
 Isipatana, 33, 42
 Issatthas (soldiers), 155
 Isukāra, 36
 Itihāsa, 245, 246, 247, 248, 250, 256
 Itihāsa-Purāṇa, 250, 253, 256, 283
 Itivuttaka, 269
 Ivory-workers, 179
 Jacōbi, H., 139, 274
 Jalapathakammikā, 183
 Jambāvātī, 102
 Jambu river, 7, 9, 10, 32
 Jambudvīpa, 1, 3, 7, 9, 13, 42, 68, 77, 80, 93, 102, 139, 181, 185, 195
 Jambugāma, 53, 54
 Jambusaṇḍa, 7
 Jambuvana, 7
 Janaka, 122
 Janakapura, 53
 Janamejaya, king, 87
 Jaṇṇupatha, 71
 Jāṇussoṇi, 161
 Jarāsandha, 121
 Jātaka—
 Akitti, 114
 Apanṇaka, 184
 Assaka, 108
 Bāvera, 185
 Bhaddasāla, 126, 130, 137
 Cetiya, 120, 133
 Citta-Sambhūta, 282
 Cullakālīṅga, 108
 Dasaratha, 132, 169
 Devadhamma, 197
 Dhumakārī, 95
 Dummedha, 130
 Ekappaṇa, 124
 Gandhāra, 123
 Ghata, 100, 101
 Kālīṅgabodhi, 116
 Kumbhakāra, 37, 97, 214
 Kuṇāla, 5, 6
 Kusa, 125
 Mahāsutasoma, 160
 Mahāsummagga, 102
 Mudupāṇi, 165
 Mugapakkha, 214

- Nandiyamiga, 132
 Phandana, 160
 Sambhava, 95
 Sambula, 130
 Samuddavāṇija, 186
 Saṅkha, 185
 Sarabhaṅga, 106, 159, 219
 Serivāṇija, 114
 Sīlānisamsa, 186
 Siri-kālakappa, 204
 Somadatta, 160
 Somanassa, 35, 37, 97
 Suppāraka, 185, 188
 Sūsima, 157
 Valāhassa, 186
 Vidhurapaṇḍita, 95, 98,
 99, 119
 Vessantara, 257
 Jāti, 143, 148
 Jaṭilas, 198, 214, 220, 222
 Java, 187, 188
 Jayaddisa, prince, 98
 Jeta, prince, 176, 235
 Jetavana, 235
 Jetuttara, 41, 91
 Jhāna, modes of, 218, 231,
 233, 255
 Jhelum, 70
 Jīvaka, 49, 237, 280, 281, 282
 Jivakambavana, 49, 236
 Jñatī clan, 225
 Jñātrikas, 124
 Jotipāla, 157, 159, 280
 Judges, 155, 171
 Kaccāyana, 100
 Kacchas, 111
 Kadamba mountain, 63
 Kahāpanas, vide coins.
 Kajaṅgala, 20, 24, 32, 34, 50,
 51, 59, 61, 135
 Kākandī, 219
 Kakutthā, 24, 54
 Kalāhu, king, 239
 Kālakavana, 20
 Kālāmas, 34, 57, 123, 134
 Kālamukha, 187, 188
 Kalandaka-nivāpa, 237
 Kālārajanaka, 122
 Kalasa, 209
 Kālasena, 100, 131
 Kālasīla, 29, 237
 Kālidāsa, 272
 Kalinga, country, 19, 34, 59,
 78, 89, 106, 116, 118, 119,
 134, 215, 239
 Kalingā, people, 113
 Kālingas, 115
 Kalpa, 250
 Kāmarūpa, 62
 Kāmasūtras, 246
 Kāmāvacarādevas, 199
 Kambojas, 72, 83, 84, 85,
 140, 141
 Kammārā (metal-workers),
 178
 Kammāsadamma, 36
 Kāmpilla, 37, 97
 Kāmpillapura, 43
 Kāmpilya, 97, 215
 Kaṃsa, 100, 101, 102,
 164

- Kamsabhoga, 67, 100, 102
 Kanaka-saptati, 246
 Kāñcīpura, 78
 Kandarā:
 Gomata, 31
 Kapota, 31
 Tapoda, 31
 Tinduka, 31
 Kanhadipāyana, 102, 239
 Kañhagāgā, 11
 Kañnamunḍa lake, 5
 Kañnapennā river, 77
 Kapila, sage, 127
 Kapila's formulation, 246
 Kapilavatthu, 24, 32, 45,
 54, 56, 73, 127, 137, 219, 236
 Karaṇḍan, king, 87, 116,
 215
 Karaṇḍu, king, 87, 116
 Karavika, 2
 Karmāra-kumbhakāra, 141
 Kārūsas, 110
 Kāśī, 19, 21, 22, 24, 33, 41,
 89, 108, 123, 125, 129,
 130, 131, 132, 133, 135,
 136, 137, 159, 168, 172,
 216
 Kāśmīra, 67, 185
 Kassakā (agriculturists),
 151
 Kassapa, 147, 220, 252
 Kathiawar, 111, 112
 Kaṭṭahārā (fuel suppliers),
 178
 Kauśāmbi, 37, 94, 118, 133
 Kauśiki, 122
 Kauṭilya, 246, 257
 Kavandhin Kātyāyana, 225
 Kāverī river, 77, 114, 115
 Kāvīrapaṭṭana, 114
 Keay, F. E., 250
 Keith, A. B., 118, 233
 Kckaka country, 115
 Kokayas, 89, 239
 Kelāsa, 10
 Keralaputras, 113, 115
 Keralas, 115
 Kern, H., 81, 224
 Kesaputta, 34, 57, 128, 134
 Ketumāla, 9
 Khalamanandala, 182
 Khalatikapavata, 27, 47
 Khānumāla, 9, 161
 Khāravēla, 44, 106, 115,
 116, 119, 134, 216
 Khattavijjā, 258
 Khattiyas, 139, 147, 154,
 163, 164, 173, 174, 178,
 180, 213
 Khomadussa, 55
 Kimpurisas, 81, 82, 200
 Kimpurusaṇṇa, 63
 Kinnaras, 81, 200
 Kirāta, 72, 80, 84, 86, 271
 Kisa Samkicca, 226
 Kisavaccha, 217, 239
 Kitāgiri, 42
 Kokanada, 223
 Kolakā, people, 113
 Koliyas, 34, 55, 126, 127, 128, 134, 168

- Kosala, 19, 21, 22, 33,
 43, 44, 45, 46, 74, 89,
 100, 120, 123, 127, 129,
 130, 131, 132, 134, 135,
 136, 137, 138, 173, 218,
 280, 281, 282
 Kosambi, 21, 75, 99, 133, 184, 185
 Kosikī, 52
 Krivis, 98
 Kṛṣṇā, river, 113, 114
 Kṛṣṇapura, 103
 Kṣatriya Parivrājakas, 230
 Kṣudrahimavadgiri, 13
 Kukkuṭa mountain, 63
 Kumāra Kassapa, 286
 Kumārī, 15
 Kumbhakāra (potters), 141,
 178, 179
 Kumbhakāragāma, 180
 Kumbhavatī, city, 106
 Kunāla lake, 5
 Kuṇḍagāma, 52
 Kuṇḍaliya, 223
 Kūṇika, 123, 124
 Kuraraghara, 75
 Kuru, 2, 19, 33, 35, 83, 89,
 93, 96, 97, 98, 99, 133,
 135, 146, 150, 163, 215
 Kurujāṅgala, 31, 35
 Kurukṣetra, 21, 35
 Kururattṭha, 34, 120
 Kuśāvati, 43, 54, 126
 Kuśinārā, 25, 53, 126, 134,
 Kūṭadanta, 161
 Kuvera, 63, 200
 Lāḍha, 19, 59, 117, 240
 Lakes, seven Himalayan, 5
 Lakkhaṇa-pāṭhakas, 210
 Land-pilot (thalaniyāmakā), 184
 Laṭṭhivana, 48
 Lauhitya, 64
 Laukika, 265
 Law, B. C., 7, 15, 16, 23, 28, 29, 31, 32, 43, 44, 45,
 46, 48, 40, etc.
 Leather-workers (cammakāra), 178, 179
 Lenas (cave-dwellings), 235
 Letters of Credit, 190
 Levi, S., 71, 188
 Licchavi clan, 211
 Licchavis, 123, 124, 125,
 126, 134, 136, 163
 Loans, 191
 Lohitavastu, 48
 Lokapālas, 200
 Lumbinīvana, 32, 55
 Maccha, 19, 98, 209
 Macchikāsaṇḍa, 42
 Madda country, 89, 116
 Maddakucchi Deer Park, 33, 237
 Maddas, 88, 89, 99
 Maṇḍurā, 23, 95, 99, 100,
 101, 102, 115, 164, 184
 Madhurasuttapaṭṭana, 78
 Madhyadeśa, 19, 21
 Madra, 67, 83, 88, 89

- Magadha, 19, 20, 24, 34,
 46, 49, 50, 87, 111, 119,
 120, 121, 123, 125, 128,
 134, 135, 136, 138, 161,
 163, 165, 206, 220, 241,
 282
 Māgahatitthakhetta, 46
 Māgandīya, 223
 Māghādeva, 122, 215
 Mahādeva, 215
 Mahāgaṅgā, 23
 Mahāgovinda, 34, 157, 158, 217, 218, 256
 Mahā-Himavanta, 4, 6
 Mahājanapadas, sixteen, 98, 109, 117
 Mahākāliṅga, 116
 Mahāmali Gaṅgā, 23
 Mahāmāttas, 155, 158
 Mahāmeru, 2
 Mahāmoggallāna, 286
 Mahānadi, 18, 24, 47
 Mahāpadmaharada, 10, 64
 Mahāpasenadi, 120, 132
 Mahārāṣṭra, 18
 Mahāsāgara, 160
 Mahāsemmata, 127, 133
 Mahāsārā, 57
 Mahāsthāngarh, 60
 Mahāsudassana, king, 126
 Mahāvana, 31, 53, 54, 126, 236
 Mahāvīra, 49, 104, 105, 118,
 120, 121, 123, 124, 209,
 211, 222, 224, 233, 236,
 240, 266
 Mahendragiri, 47
 Mahī, 6, 11, 23
 Mahimsakā, people, 113
 Mahimsakarāṭṭha, 90, 115
 Māhismatī, 17, 34, 77, 104
 Māhissatī, 34, 74, 75, 104
 Maholi, 99
 Maināka, 10
 Majjhimadesa, 18, 34, 224
 Majumdar, R. C., 188
 Mākandī, 219
 Makhādeva, 122, 215
 Makkhali Gosāla, 224, 226, 274
 Malalasekera, G. P., 45, 50,
 58, 75, 77, etc.
 Malay Peninsula, 188
 Malaya, 19
 Mallaki clan, 211
 Mallas, 117, 125, 126, 134,
 137, 146, 163
 Mallikā, 46
 Mānas-sarovara, 12, 63
 Mandākinī lake, 5
 Maṇikārā (jewellers), 178
 Manimckhalā, 205
 Manoja, 130
 Manussa-vikkaya (traffic in human beings), 191
 Mariyādā, 152
 Marukaccha, 74
 Mātāṅga, hill, 28
 Mātāṅga, sage, 239
 Matchmakers, 150, 152, 155
 Māṭharavṛtti, 246
 Māthava, king, 121, 122,
 214
 Mathurā, 67, 75, 84, 99, 103

- Matsya, 21, 98, 99, 209
 Māuryas, 101, 112
 Mediterranean, 187
 Megasthenes, 101
 Mekalas, 70, 109, 110
 Menander, 88
 Mendaka, 175
 Meru, 2, 8
 Message-senders (pesana-kacorā), 172
 Metal-workers (kammārā), 178
 Māhorā, 103
 Migadāya, 33
 Migāra, banker, 176, 235
 Migasammatā, 25
 Milakkhabhāsā, 86, 110, 113, 249, 271
 Milinda, 83, 88
 Mithi, 122
 Mithilā, 34, 40, 50, 53, 122, 123, 216
 Mlecchas, 139
 Moggaliputta, 168
 Moggallāna, 212, 234, 239
 Molinī, 41
 Mohyasīvaka, 223
 Money-lenders, 191
 Mookerjee, R. K., 186, 210
 Mophis, 88
 Moriyas, 34, 128, 134, 138
 Mote-hall, 124, 125, 127
 Mrgadāva, 33, 42
 Mrtapas, 141
 Muddā (conveyancing), 249
 Mukheluvana, 51
 Mūlaka, 78, 108
 Muṇḍakas (shavolings), 222
 Multra, 99
 Muzaffarpur Dist., 52
 Mysore, 18, 77
 Nacch (dancing), 261
 Nāgas, 105
 Nāgasena, 277
 Nāgavana, 32
 Naggaji, king, 87, 116, 122, 215
 Nakṣatravidyā, 250
 Nakulapitā, 175
 Nalakārā (basket-makers),
 178
 Nālandā, 45, 236
 Nalinī, river, 10
 Nandagopā, 101
 Nanda Vaccha, 226
 Nandiya, 223
 Nandiyāvatta, 209
 Nangaraka, 55
 Narmadā, 17, 18, 74, 77,
 105
 Nasik, 18, 78
 Natthikavādā, 110
 Nawal, 32
 Nemindhara, 2
 Nepal, 56
 Neranjarā, 22, 24, 47, 236
 Nesālas, 140, 179
 Newal, 32
 Nisaka, 133
 Niganttha Nātaputta, 224,
 225
 Niganthas, 198

- Niggāhaka (tax-collectors), 150
 Nigrodha, 54
 Nimi, king, 122, 215, 216
 Nirukta, 262, 263
 Nisādas, 151
 Niṣadha Mt., 3, 9
 Niyyānaka (water-pilot), 187
 Nṛtyamārga, 262, 265
 Oḍḍakas, 110, 271
 Okkāka, 125, 126, 131, 169
 Okkalas, 79, 109, 110, 271
 Omphis, 88
 Opasāda, 161
 Orissa, 79, 110
 Oxydrakai, 69
 Pabbosā, 39
 Pācīnavamṣa, 41
 Paḍapāṭha, 247
 Pādha, 19
 Paduma mountain, 63
 Pallava, 68
 Paṭṭhan, 77
 Pajjota, 105, 138
 Pajjuna, 101
 Pakudha Kaccāyana, 224, 225, 274
 Pālaka, 105
 Palāsapura, 236
 Pālura, 79
 Pañcāla, 19, 21, 23, 33, 36, 56, 97, 98, 120, 122, 135, 163, 215
 Pañcavaṭṭi, 78, 219
 Pāṇḍara, 28
 Pāṇḍava (hill), 27
 Paṇḍu, 168
 Pāṇḍyas, 113, 115
 Pāṇini, 198, 264, 268, 275
 Panjab, 120
 Paṇikadhā, 45
 Panthaghātacorā (highway robbers), 172, 173
 Paramayona, 70, 187
 Pārada, 67
 Parantapa, 120, 133
 Pargiter, F. E., 104, 105
 Pariahs, 141
 Paribbājakas, 198, 201, 221, 224, 226, 227, 230, 231, 234, 235, 236, 238, 254, 255, 268
 Pārileyyaka, 39
 Pārileyyakavana, 31
 Pārindas, 113, 114
 Pāripātra, 20, 23
 Pārittas, 207, 208
 Pārśva, 130, 266
 Pasenadi, 120, 127, 131, 132, 136, 137, 138, 157, 161, 173, 207, 218, 219, 280
 Pāṭaligāma, 49, 136, 159
 Pāṭaliputta, 24, 33, 49, 57, 60, 75, 159
 Paṭibhānakūta, 29
 Paṭiṭṭhāna, 75, 77, 184
 Patna, 46
 Paudanya, 107
 Pāvā, 54, 126, 134
 Pāvāpurī, 49

- Pāvārikambavana, 49, 236
 Payāga, 23, 24
 Pchoa, 66
 Periplus, 76
 Pesakārā (woavers), 178
 Pesanakacorā (message-senders), 173
 Pettanikas, 173
 Phalgu, 48
 Phalikapabbata, 6
 Pilotika, 223
 Piṅgala, 112, 138
 Pipphalivana, 32, 34, 56, 128, 134
 Piprāvā, 56
 Pitinikas, 106
 Piyadasi, 238
 Pliny, 114
 Pokkharasāti, 161
 Pokkharāvati, 109, 110
 Potali, 78, 107
 Potaliputta, 223
 Potaliya, 175, 223
 Potana, 34, 78, 107
 Potters (kumbhakārā), 141, 178, 179
 Potṭhapāda, 222
 Pradyumna, 101
 Prāgbodhi (hills), 26
 Prayāga, 17, 21
 Prosody (chandasā), 248, 249, 263
 Prostitutes, 176, 192
 Pṛthudaka, 66
 Ptolemy, 76, 112, 114, 188
 Pūbbārāma, 46, 235
 Pūbbasala, 114
 Pūbbavidola, 2, 9
 Pukkusa, 140
 Pukkusāti, king, 87, 120
 Pulika, 105, 120
 Pulindas, 113
 Puṇḍakakṣa-hill, 51, 60
 Puṇḍavardhana, 21, 51, 60
 Puṇṇabhadda, 198
 Puṇṇaka, the Yakkha, 99
 Puṇṇhavi, 41
 Pūraṇa Kassapa, 224, 274
 Purisamedha (human-sacrifice), 205
 Purohitas, 151, 155, 156, 157, 158, 162, 180, 201, 206, 217
 Puru, 133
 Puruṣapura, 68
 Puṣkalāvati, 72, 87
 Rāḍha country, 117
 Rājagaha, 27, 33, 44, 49, 75, 78, 119, 121, 173, 176, 184, 232, 236, 237, 255, 280, 281
 Rājagṛha, 215
 Rājayoga, 232, 255
 Rajgir, 29
 Rajputana, 68, 184
 Rakkitatala, 7
 Rāma, 217, 219
 Rāmāgāma, 34
 Rāmasetu, 13
 Rāmeśvaram, 13
 Rāpti, 23
 Rathakāra lake, 5
 Ratnagiri, 28

- Ravi, 69
 Ray Chaudhuri, H. C., 83,
 85, 94
 Renu, 103, 115, 118, 129, 157, 217
 R̥gveda, 109, 245, 250
 Rhys Davids, C. A. F., 55, 58
 190, 262
 Rhys Davids, T. W., 55,
 134, 140, 186, 187, 200,
 204, 221
 Rockhill, W. W., 262, 265
 Rohaṇas, 93
 Rohini, river, 24, 55, 127
 Rohitā, 10, 64
 Rohwaini, 25
 Roruka, 34, 70
 Rowai, 24
 Rudradāman I, 112
 Rudrāyana, king, 111, 120, 215
 Rummindei, 55
 Rūpnārāyaṇ, 59

 Sabarā, people, 114
 Sabhiya, 223
 Sacrificers (yājaka), 151, 155
 Śaḍānira, 46, 52, 123
 Saddhivihārīka, 238
 Śāgala, 69, 88, 116
 Śāgara, 100, 164
 Śāgarikā, 166
 Sahaḥṣṭi, 39, 41, 185
 Sahaṣṭicanika, 41
 Sahaṣṣambavana, 236
 Śailagiri, 28
 Śākala, 69, 88
 Śāketa, 21, 31, 44, 45, 132
 176, 184
 Sakuladāyī, 223
 Śākya, 24, 55, 125, 127,
 128, 131, 134, 137, 146,
 163, 168, 169
 Salālavati, 21, 25, 26, 32,
 51, 59
 Śalavana, 32
 Śālāvati, 161
 Śāli, 182
 Śalyatantra, 259
 Samajjās, 171
 Samaṇas, 224, 226, 227, 234, 235, 238, 242, 253
 Samatata, 61
 Sāmāvati, 166
 Sambalpur, 18
 Sambhuttara, 19
 Saṃkassa, 39
 Saṃkissa, 39, 90
 Samṃnti (Sṃrti), 248
 Sandaka, 223
 Sañjaya Belaṭṭhiputta, 224,
 225, 274
 Śaṅkara, 250
 Saṅkhyā (Sāṃkhyā), 248
 Śānupabbata, 6
 Sappasonḍikapabbhāra, 48
 Sappinī, 25, 26
 Sarabha, 223
 Sarabhaṅga, sage, 216, 217,
 220, 256
 Sarabhū, 6, 11, 22, 23, 43, 46
 Sarajā, 23
 Sarasvatī, river, 10, 17, 20, 22, 34, 36

- Sārathipura, 48
 Sāravana, 46, 235
 Sāravati, 21, 26, 59
 Sarayū, 23, 25, 43, 219
 Sāriputta, 168, 212
 Sārṇāth, 43
 Śaṣṭitantra, 245, 246
 Satānika, 118
 Satiyaputras, 113
 Sātodikā river, 76
 Sattapaṇṇi, 31
 Sattapaṇṇiguhā, 237 Satthavāhā (caravan merchants), 70, 184, 185
 Sātvatas, 103, 106
 Saulmas, 117
 Śaurasenī dialect, 101
 Śaurpārakas, 112
 Sauvira, 67, 70, 111, 120, 215
 Śavaras, 113, 114
 Savaris, 114
 Sāvattihī, 21, 23, 26, 31, 39,
 40, 43, 44, 45, 46, 111,
 112, 124, 132, 161, 173,
 176, 184, 185, 219, 233,
 235 Sekhiya rules (laws of etiquette), 243
 Selectors of lucky sites, 152
 Senānigāma, 47
 Senāpatīs, 155, 171, 180
 Senis, 179
 Serivaraṭṭha, 79
 Seriyāputa, 57
 Setavyā, 32, 45, 55
 Seyaviyā, 72, 91
 Sialkot, 69
 Sihappapāṭaka, lake, 5
 Sihapura, 120
 Silavati, 55
 Sindhu, 6, 8, 10, 12, 64, 67, 70, 98
 Sindhu-Sovira, 111
 Sineru Mt., 1, 2, 3
 Siri (Goddess of Luck), 204
 Sirivacca, 208
 Śisupāla, 121
 Sitā, river, 10
 Sitavana, 237
 Sivi, 91, 102, 107
 Slaves, 178, 192
 Smith, V. A., 134
 Sodrai, 69
 Sohamma, 199
 Soṇa, river, 24
 Soṇadaṇḍa, 161
 Soṇagiri, 28, 29
 Soṇṇabhūmi, 178
 Sopārā, 112
 Soreyya, 39
 Sothhivati, 40
 Sothhiya class of Brahmins,
 147, 155, 201, 247
 Sovira, 34, 185
 Śrāvastī, 23, 43, 215, 235
 Stevenson, 211
 Suari, 114
 Subbhābhūmi, 59, 117
 Subhā Jīvakaṃbanikā, 272
 Subhacaityaka, 28
 Sūcīmukhī, 223
 Sudarsana, 9

- Suddas, 139, 141, 145,
 148, 154, 178, 180, 213,
 242
 Suhma, 51, 60, 117
 Sujāta, prince, 108
 Suktimatī, 40
 Sumbhas, 51, 117
 Sumedhā, 272
 Sumeru Mt., 1, 2, 3, 8, 62,
 • 201
 Surasumāragira, 32, 39, 40, 110, 134
 Sunāparanta, 76, 112
 Śuṅgas, 138
 Suppārakas, 111, 112
 Sūrasenas, 67, 74, 98, 99,
 101, 103
 Suratṭha, 112, 138
 Surpāraka, 74, 76
 Suti (Śruti), 248, 249
 Suvannabhūmi, 178, 185,
 186, 187, 188
 Suvannatala, 6
 Suvarṇarekhā, 26, 32, 59
 Svetapura, 60
 Swat valley, 107
 •
 Takkaṣilā, 43, 87, 88, 184,
 • 278, 280, 281, 282
 Tāmalitti, 33, 60, 185
 Tambapaṇṇidīpa, 186
 Tāmraliṅga, 188
 Tāmralipti, 117
 Tāpasas, 201, 213, 215,
 219, 222, 226, 229, 230,
 231, 255
 Tapodārāma, 237
 Tārukkha, 161
 Telavāha river, 79, 114.
 Teliṅgana, 18
 Telingiri, 114
 Thalapathakammikā, 183
 Thanoswar, 17, 67
 Thomas, E. J., 160, 176, 234
 Thūpa, 21, 66
 Tinduka-kandarā, 31
 Tirhut, 52
 Tittiriyas, 201, 253
 Tiyaḡgala, rock, 11
 Tiyaḡgalapokkharāṇi, 11
 Todeyya, 161
 Torāṇavatthu, 45
 Travancore, 18
 Triśalā, 123
 Tuṇḍikeras, 104
 Tūrhna, 35
 Udayagiri, 28
 Udayana, 133, 138
 Uddakarāmaputta, 232, 284
 Udena, 110, 120, 133
 Udumbara, 39
 Uggaputtas, 174
 Ujjayinī, 104, 185
 Ujjeni, 75, 104
 Ukkācelā, 53
 Ukkala, 109, 110
 Ukkalāvassabhaññā, 110
 Ukkatṭhā, 45, 161
 Uḷumpa, 45
 Upālī, 242, 280
 Uravelā, 42, 47, 48, 49, 220,
 • 232

- Uśinara, 38
 Uśiradhvajā Mt., 21
 Utkala, 79, 109, 110
 Uttarakuru, 2, 9, 35, 81, 89
 Uttara-madhurā, 99, 100, 102, 113
 Uttara-madras, 88
 Uttarapacificāla, 31, 35, 36, 37, 43, 97, 120
 Uttarāpatha, 18, 19, 66, 67, 71, 73, 90, 100, 107, 109, 110, 140, 184
 " "
 Vacchagotta, 223
 Vāhika, 67
 Vāhudā, river, 22
 Vaiḥbhāragiri, 28, 30
 Vajrādhyā, 4, 8, 12, 13, 77, 107
 Vajji, 19, 32, 33, 52, 123
 Vālmiki, 257
 Vamśa, 19, 23, 33, 37, 120, 134, 138, 166
 Vanacarakā (explorers of forest regions), 219, 220
 Vāṇamantradevas, 200
 Vaṅgas, 117, 118
 Vardhamāna, 209
 Varendra, 21
 Varṣadhara Mt., 4
 Vāsālā, 48
 Vāsavadattā, 105
 Vāsudeva, 100, 101, 102, 103, 132, 146, 167, 198
 Vatsa, 22, 23, 33, 37, 39, 40, 41, 138
 Vedohi, 123
 Vedisa, 75, 84, 109
 Vedisagiri, 75
 Vedyaka hill, 26, 30
 Vchalla, 135
 Vekhanassa, 223
 Veḷugāma, 75
 Veḷuvana, 236, 237
 Venāgapura, 45
 Vopulla Mt., 27, 29, 30, 119
 Verāñjā, 39, 75
 Verāpatha, 187
 Vesālī, 24, 31, 40, 47, 49, 52, 54, 111, 124, 134, 136, 137, 225
 Vossas, 139, 145, 148, 150, 154, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 180
 Veṭhadīpa, 34, 57
 Vetravati, 109
 Vettavati, 6, 25, 26, 74
 Vidarbha, 215
 Videgha Māthava, 121
 Videha, 2, 24, 34, 46, 52, 98, 121, 122, 123, 157, 185, 186, 215, 216, 217
 Vidisā, 26
 Viḍūḍabha, 127, 137, 169
 Vijādharaḍhivāsā, 44
 Vijaya, 215
 Vikāṣa Mt., 63
 Vinasana, 17, 20, 21, 23
 Vinatāka, 2
 Vinaya, 267
 Vindhya, 4, 16, 33, 34, 44, 100, 107, 108, 214, 217, 218

- | | |
|-----------------------------|------------------------------|
| Vipula, 28, 30 | Wrestlers, 178 |
| Virūḍhaka (Virūḥhaka), 132, | |
| • 200 | Yādavas, 95, 103 |
| Visākhā, 40, 235 | Yājñikas, 151 |
| Vitamsā, 6, 73 | Yājñpur, 47 |
| Vrātyas, 118 | Yamunā, 6, 11, 17, 22, 23, |
| Vṛṣabha Mt., 28 | 24, 26, 38, 40, 41, 99, 109, |
| | 133, 185, 214 |
| Water-pilot (niyyāmaka), | Yaśodharā, 204 |
| • 187 | Yavana Tuṣāspa, 112 |
| Weavers (posakārā), 141, | Yonas, 82, 83, 84, 140, |
| 178, 179 | 141 |
| Wood-carvers, 141 | |
| Wreath makers, 179 | Zimmer, 190 |

